The sort of controls we here seek to impose could, in the flash of an eye under dictatorial influence, crush and destroy all the precious heritages which we seek by their enactment to protect. Truly, they represent another surrender of our representative form of government to the totalitarian ideologies. They should not be necessary, but in the world-shaking crisis which presently confronts our Nation, they are necessary.

If we are to be honest with ourselves, we must admit they are necessary because selfish, unpatriotic Americans have allied themselves with either one of two groups, both of which put the needs of their Nation second to their own selfish purposes. They are the profiteers on the one hand, and the hoarders on the other. We have had them with us always, but never have they been so prevalent and so disgustingly avaricious as they disclosed themselves to be since the Korean war.

It is, of course, a sorrowful thing that to weed out these people who insist upon excessive profits and well-stocked larders while boys are bleeding and dying in Asia, we must inconvenience and embarrass countless thousands who would neither profiteer nor hoard. But well-ordered law, which is what we are fighting to protect, must sometimes work hardships to the end that its advantages to the whole people may survive. In our everyday lives we can treat individually with those who cause us inconvenience and embarrassment by their dishonest and fraudulent practices. But in time of national and international peril, only by strict, rigid and sometimes arbitrary governmental control can we check the selfishness and greed of unscrupulous traders.

Piecemeal efforts and voluntary controls will not do the job.

Mr. President, I know the weakness of controls. I know the natural trend toward black markets which results therefrom. Again and again, in the occupation of Europe, I was charged with the enforcement of rationing measures, of controls of the severest nature, but they were emergency measures forced by stark necessity and though there were violations—wholesale violations in some instances—the value of controls was definitely and generally established. Those controls at that time fed and clothed great populations. They kept our fighting forces free and clear of rioting and civil commotion in our immediate rear.

Yes, sadly enough, we do have to meet necessity when it arises, and at times by extraordinary methods, and today necessity knocks at our door, not gently, but with a firm and threatening hand—indeed, with an armed fist. Members of the Senate, we are at war—longer to think of the Korean incident as a "police action" is to think of Gettysburg as a mere skirmish—it is to think of Pearl Harbor as a water-front fire.

We today not only fight the army of North Korea—we fight the cold and treacherous forces of communism the world over. We fight a Russia which is far more imperialistic and ruthless than the Russia of the czars. We fight a godless and dogmatic regime dedicated to the proposition that they will either rule or ruin.

Of course, Mr. President, I know how illogical it may seem to damn and criticize a vicious ideology based upon totalitarianism and in the same breath centralize further controls in our country where centralization has nearly reached the breaking point. But the American people still speak through the ballot and when a few years ago, they wanted to be rid of controls, they said so in no uncertain terms in the selection of their representatives—and they will do so again when the time is appropriate. In fact, on this issue I can state with certainty that the people of my great State have already spoken with clarity and force, this time of course for controls. During the past 6 weeks my mail has been almost unanimous in favor of an all-out control program to be applied when necessary. And strange as it may seem, most of the support emanates from responsible citizens in every level of life who heretofore had looked upon price controls with alarm and as a vehicle of political regimentation toward a socialistic state. Today, as in the past, our citizens are prepared for any sacrifice in order to protect and defend those brave men and women who are presently and who, in the future, will be offering their lives in the defense of our Nation and free men the world over.

The bill before the Senate of the United States is by its very nature offensive to most of us because, as I have said, it violates the very spirit of our way of life.

There is an old axiom to the effect that we must fight fire with fire, we must kill poison with poison, and so as I see the two-horned dilemma with which we are presently being gored, we have but one choice, and that is to invoke the philosophy of that axiom. Without question, it was in this sphere of thought and in this spirit that the distinguished Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate of the United States approached the difficult and complex problem with which it was confronted on this extremely vital issue, and at this point, I may say that that committee has produced a document which in principle is a magnificent attest to the ingenuity of inspired American patriotism in an hour of tension, sadness, and not a little frustration.

With the general policies of the bill under consideration, I can, under existing circumstances, have no quarrel. Those policies, to me, as I have indicated, are crystal clear necessities of the moment regardless of my fundamental beliefs upon our normal constitutional limitations and procedures in the interest of the people. And so to the committee I can only say, "Well done, good and faithful servants." Their patriotic and arduous labors in a time of stress and strain will be to the everlasting credit of every member of the committee.

And I may say, further, that their efforts are another brilliant indication that America in a crisis can be completely without partisanship—that it can forget party strife and party pettiness even in an important election year. Indeed, the efforts of the committee in this instance furnish proof positive of the fact that to attack the integrity of America and its high and lofty aims for mankind is only to strengthen its economy and unite its forces, regardless of party, race, or creed. I commend, despite my disagreement with some phases of the bill, the committee for its bold and fearless approach to what to most Americans under more normal circumstances would be a very unpopular program.

Mr. President, I shall not at this point belabor the Senate with those provisions of the bill concerning which I have serious reservations because I am sure that appropriate amendments, both pending and heretofore adopted, will alleviate much of my concern in this respect. But I would like briefly to discuss the one phase of the over-all problem of controls as it confronts us in this bill which must give concern, not only to the Members of the Congress but to the people whom they represent, and, I may say, to those who are concerned the world over with their individual liberties. I refer to the all-out powers which we would vest in the executive branch of Government by enacting the bill.

For 18 years now the executive branch of our Government has virtually dominated our entire system of checks and balances through one crisis after another, each time using the crisis as the excuse, and throughout those 18 years each succeeding Congress—with the exception of that "infamous" Eightieth Congress, which to me will ever belie the indictments of its opposition—each succeeding Congress has surrendered more and more of its authority, its power, and it moral and legal responsibilities, and here today we find ourselves again preparing to surrender tremendous all-out powers to the executive and administrative branches of Government.

I have said that in this instance there is no escape; but in the interest of America and its future, in the interest of our time-honored constitutional procedures, under which the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of Government each has its separate and distinct functions in the interest of the survival of all the traditions which have reflected themselves so vividly in our accomplishments as a nation, down through the years of our existence, I take this opportunity both to warn our people and to challenge the inner soul of the American President, that this surrender of powers might well be the last surrender unless those powers are used with the utmost discretion, unless those powers are applied with the greatest exactness of the purpose for which they are intended. I warn that unless the greatest integrity is invoked in the execution of the broad powers of this bill, they will fail of their purposes, even as the surrender of powers in the greatest era of the Roman Empire failed in its purpose.

Yes, Mr. President, the responsibility which by the enactment of this bill will be placed on the doorstep of the President of the United States, is equally as great as the challenge which, by our action on this issue, we have hurled to the American people, for clearly unto them we say, "To protect your precious liberties, we, the Congress of the United States, have unleashed powers which can clearly destroy those liberties unless you are constantly aware of and alert to the dangers which they offer in the difficult months and perhaps years ahead." The eternal vigilance of which Mr. Jefferson spoke so eloquently more than 150 years ago, is now the challenge to all of us, as we await the faithful execution of the extraordinary powers contained in the pending legislation; and this is so now, more than ever before in our history.

On this score, I should like to bespeak my deep personal convictions regarding one of the important features of Senate bill 3936.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to compliment the Senator from New Jersey on the speech he is making; and I wish to point out that the only person to whom we could give such powers, under the Constitution, is the President of the United States. I am as hopeful as is the Senator from New Jersey that the President will exercise those powers wisely.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I am sure that will be so, and I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his contribution.

Mr. President, by the enactment of section 304 we would virtually authorize the credit of the United States, on the approval of the President, to be used to the extent of $2,000,000,000 on a contingent basis. This, in my judgment, in the light of present fiscal trends and present fiscal needs, goes too far. Already we have mortgaged our future to a point of internal danger; and whether we of the Congress like it or not, we, each of us, under the Constitution of the United States, have both a legal and a moral responsibility to our country and its people to control the purse strings of the Nation. What does the Constitution say in this respect? Section 8 of article 1 provides, in part, that—

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;
> To borrow money on the credit of the United States—

And so forth.

To me, that provision of the Constitution means that we are the sole custodian of the Nation's fiscal business; and we therefore have no right to delegate excessive authority in this regard. Clearly, we have a solemn obligation which we cannot escape or avoid without both an actual and a moral violation of our oath as Senators. Again and again for the last 18 years we have been shirking responsibilities in respect to this phase of the Nation's business, doing so under the guise of emergencies. I believe that the people of America want an end to the sort of fiscal management which they have seen in their National Government in recent years. So, in respect to this particular provision of the bill, namely, section 304, I shall support any reasonable amendment to curtail such an excessive authorization.

Further than this, I shall support, as I have indicated, other amendments which are designed to safeguard and to bring the measure more in line with our constitutional concepts.

I want now to reiterate a thought which I expressed at the very outset of my remarks, to the effect that by the action we are taking on this measure or by the action we shall take on it on Monday, we are surrendering certain elements of liberty guaranteed under our Constitution. We are doing this to meet the impact of an aggression which may lead, if it has not already led, to another global war; and so we justify the course of action we are about to pursue.

But that justification, Mr. President, relieves us not one mite of our responsibilities to the people. Indeed, it adds a vast new responsibility to those we assumed when we took our respective oaths of office. It charges us with a new duty—to be ever watchful and ever alert to the slightest abuses, wherever they may occur, as a result of the enactment of this legislation; and this is so, whether those abuses be abuses of powers or abuses of administrative authority.

Under our form of government, we are more responsible for the preservation of the liberties of our people than are the people themselves. So, Mr. President, as we yield some of the inherent rights which the people of America normally possess, let us be mindful from this moment forward, and until this measure has by the blessings of the Almighty taken its place with all obsolete things, that only by our "eternal vigilance" can we square ourselves with the people, whose rights and privileges we undertake, for their benefit, to subject to such broad limitations.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I feel, as does the Senator from New Jersey, that as if the war should spread and conditions become worse, the enactment of this bill would be necessary.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I feel exactly that way.

Mr. MAYBANK. If that condition should develop, I know the Senator would be among the first on the floor of the Senate to propose the enactment of such legislation.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Of course, I am convinced of the absolute necessity for the enactment of such legislation.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to assure the Senator that I would join him in such case.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina and I feel exactly the same way about this matter. I believe that our minds are not one iota apart in regard to it.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I too, would like to commend the Senator from New Jersey for what I regard as the very fine and statesmanlike contribution which he has made to this debate; and I am sorry that not more Senators have had the privilege of hearing his remarks.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I wish to raise on the floor of the United States Senate some pertinent questions which I know are on the minds and are of great concern to every Member of the Congress and to every other loyal American citizen.

These questions concern our foreign policy and our war plans. I wish to make perfectly clear in the beginning that I am not in a critical mood, and I am not searching for someone to blame for our present situation. What we need is a way out. I have supported by my voice and by my vote every phase of our war effort in Korea, from the very minute it was announced to the Congress that we had started fighting. I was the first Member of the United States Senate, I believe, to announce on the floor of the Senate that, much as I disliked controls, I would support a control bill to back our war effort. I mention these points merely to show that I am not an obstructionist, and that I am not undertaking merely to criticize.

I expect to continue to back our position in every way I can. But, Mr. President, what is our position, and what is our policy? That is the question the American people want answered. They are entitled to have it answered, but no answer has been forthcoming.

The fighting has been going on now for more than 7 weeks. During that time we have been called on to extend the term of service for all our enlisted ment. We did that, and the American people backed us up. Furthermore, we in the Congress have been called on to enact another draft law. We have done so, and the American people have backed us up. But still we have not been given any definite word that even remotely outlines our policy or our plan in present foreign affairs, particularly in the Pacific and Asiatic areas.

Furthermore, we have been called on in the Congress to appropriate the first $10,000,000,000 of what will be a multi-billion-dollar military program. We will vote the money, its initial part at least, and the people will back us up. But still, we and the American people are absolutely in the dark as to our real policy, and the Congress is actually having to take these far-reaching steps at a time when the only light before us as to policy is the former policies of our present Secretary of State, which were repudiated by our march into Korea. This was a march for which our Defense Department had not been forewarned nor prepared.

Moreover, we are called on to enact a control bill regulating and controlling the economic forces and power of the Nation, and we shall pass this bill after a few more days of consideration, and the people are backing us up as to this bill. We shall be called on shortly to increase taxes for the war effort. However, we still have no plan or policy as to our real position. At the beginning I heard our action compared to the foray into Mexico in 1915 during President Wilson's administration. I also heard it called a police action. But, Mr. President, the Nation does not enact a draft law, lay out a military program costing billions of dollars, enact new tax laws, mobilize its military power, and enact laws to control materials merely because of a police action.

The people have backed these steps and measures, but, Mr. President, the people of the United States will not long support an undeclared and undefined war that does not have a definite direction, a clear purpose, and an ultimate goal. The people will soon be clamoring, and rightfully so, for an outline of our situation and a statement of our purposes. The people are not afraid of the facts. They will set their shoulders to the wheel in any emergency, but they must know which way the wheel is turning. We cannot fight on imaginary lines nor for an imaginary principle, and we should not.

The people and I believe many of us in the Congress are looking to someone for a statement of policy and of war ideals. We have been told we would carry out the United Nations request as to Korea; that we would defend Formosa; and, that we would aid with matériel and a military mission in Indochina. But nothing further has been said. What about China? Shall we intercede there? What about the remainder of Asia? If we are to draw a line, and I think we should, where shall it be? We cannot fight for an imaginary line, nor for an imaginary principle, especially when they are locked in the secret confines of someone else's mind.

Are we to look to the Congress to formulate a policy? Ordinarily, Congress does not originate such policies, but of course has to approve or reject or modify proposals made by others. But if the leadership is not coming from elsewhere, then it behooves us, the Members of the Congress, to quickly put aside other matters and formulate a foreign and war policy that will be based on reason and will meet the hard realities that face us. There will be differences of opinion among us, and our information will not be full and complete, but we do have trained, able, experienced, and patriotic men on our Foreign Relations Committee and on our Armed Services Committee. We have others in the Congress who can make splendid contributions. We will be handicapped in many ways, it is true, but we can formulate a firm, positive policy that will have a definite course.

I want a policy that is directed at the heart of the threat to us. That threat is Russia, a nation that stands convicted in the eyes of the American people, and I believe in the eyes of free peoples in a majority of the other sovereign nations of the world. This policy must be outlined in terms so clear-cut that no room for doubt will exist as to where we stand. This policy must not be one that will force us to spend our strength and sacrifice our sons on the fringes of the threat. We must not continue to court disaster in such adventures.

Mr. President, this is a dark day in America now, but not caused altogether by the unfavorable news that comes from Korea. I have a confident feeling that the trend there will be reversed. The darkness of the hour is due to the lack of a policy and the lack of a plan that extends beyond Korea. The people want light from Washington. Mr. President, I repeat, the people of the United States will not long support an undeclared war that does not have definite direction, a clear purpose, and an ultimate goal. We are supporting such a war now, but that support will not long last, nor should it last long without a policy for which definite plans can be made and carried out. Without a clearly defined cause to fight for, made unmistakably plain to all of us, this war will soon grow sour and stale.

I repeat, I have no political brickbat to throw at anyone, and no political bouquets to bestow on anyone. The world is literally trembling on the threshold of world war III. This is no time for politics. This is no time for favoritism. This is no time for soft words. We must have a definite, realistic, positive policy as to this war and our future protection. We do not have it now. If such a policy and plan is not forthcoming in a matter of days, we, the Members of the Congress, cannot hesitate longer; we must tell the American people there is no well-defined policy, and then proceed to consult here in the Halls of Congress and formulate one the best way we can.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Mississippi upon his eloquent speech.

Mr. STENNIS. I wish to thank the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wanted to ask the Senator some questions, but I realized he wanted to complete his speech without interruption.

Mr. STENNIS. I certainly thank the Senator.

TARIFF-REDUCING PARLEY AT TORQUAY, ENGLAND, A THREAT TO FREE TRADE

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a release from my office dated August 16, dealing with the continued threat to free trade and to the industries of this Nation, and particularly dealing with the Torquay, England, parley in September, which is evidently aimed at completing the job.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 16, 1950.—United States Senator GEORGE W. MALONE, Republican, of Nevada, charged today that under cover of war the State Department officials "who have been Red-sympathizers all along are advancing their scheme to wreck American industry and bring on socialism."

In support of this charge, Senator MALONE said: "In the face of national mobilization for war, these State Department officials are now making plans for an anti-American tariff-reducing parley in Torquay, England, next month. Not 'Business-as-usual', but 'Attack-American-business-as-usual' seems to be their slogan. There is evidence that while our boys are being attacked in Korea by the Communists, the Communist-sympathizers in our midst are planning insidious attacks on American industry. There is much more to the long-range Communist conspiracy against the security of America than espionage and sabotage by foreign spies and American traitors.

"One of the attacks on American industry which is far-reaching and devastating is the removal or reduction of import fees on foreign cheap-labor products, against which American workers cannot compete without lowering their standard of living. The American watch industry, glassware industry, textile, fuel, and copper industries, and a hundred others, have been seriously hurt already by the lowering of tariffs, but the State Department plans further destructive tariff-lowering at the Torquay parley.

"The Red-sympathizers would like to see their plot develop to the extent that (a) as soon as the war is over, all investments would be wiped out; (b) there would be an end to venture capital; (c) all producers and distributors would be forced to seek Government subsidies; (d) all production and distribution would be guaranteed by the Government; and (e) we would be forced into the bottomless pit of socialism.

"If we could stop the schemers in the State Department, it would be the first important step toward saving America."

PENETRATION OF FOREIGN IDEAS INTO THE THOUGHT LIFE OF AMERICA

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, our country is engaged in a war with communism. The immediate manifestation of that war is on the soil of South Korea. The realism of that war is apparent to our outnumbered boys who fight and die there. To many people in this country tion to increasing our American troops in western Europe. Acheson is against arming Japan and obviously Communist aggression is a threat to that country.

Contemptible? In 1945, Acheson sought to establish a four-power commission to control occupied Japan. General MacArthur was to receive his orders from that commission in which Russia would have an equal voice with the United States.

In Korea, we are now reaping the whirlwind of Acheson's blunders and the President seems to be so confused and perplexed by the flood of events that he is blind to the devious paths down which Acheson has advised him.

One day the President says there is no need for UMT and within 48 hours he asks Congress, through the Secretary of Defense for passage of the universal military training bill.

The Congress has given the President every dime he has asked for national defense and more too. Now, he calls for UMT when he has had available the selective-service law.

The President has either frozen or held back nearly $900,000,000 in cash and contract authority that Congress provided for fiscal year 1950. Now we are told these funds are to be released for expenditure in the present fiscal year 1951. Before Korea, it was "freeze" defense appropriations and now it is "unfreeze" them.

The American people are alert to the blunders of the Truman administration. They have seen Acheson's policies lead us down the road to another war. In any other country, Acheson long ago would have received a vote of no confidence. The President's failure to remove Acheson, after repudiating his stupid foreign policies, is contemptible.

Let the President appoint as Secretary of State some one in whom the American people have confidence; some one who is in sympathy with the present policy in South Korea. Under that kind of leadership we shall go forward to victory in Korea and under that kind of leadership we shall have a foreign policy in keeping with American traditions and American principles. Under that kind of leadership in America lies hope for durable peace.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950—UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, earlier today we entered into a unanimous-consent request under which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] will speak tomorrow morning. The Senator from Nebraska has indicated that he has some questions which he desires to ask me with respect to some amendments to the pending bill which we are to take up tomorrow. I ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Illinois has concluded his remarks we may have a discussion of the amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator is referring to the amendments to the control bill, is he not?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. MAYBANK. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, August 18, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridan.

House of Representatives

THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast brought us out of the darkness of the night into the glory and beauty of this new day, grant that in all the tasks and responsibilities of our high calling we may have the assurance of Thy presence, the fullness of Thy power, and the benediction of Thy peace.

Grant that we may now yield ourselves to the guidance of Thy spirit. We know that Thou art the God of righteousness and of victory and that we have been created not for failure but for triumph.

We pray that we may have the courage to believe that a day will dawn when all the instruments of warfare shall become the instruments of welfare in the building of a nobler civilization and nations shall rise to the loftier altitudes of amity of peace.

We offer our prayer through the merits and mediation of the Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On August 12, 1950:

H. J. Res. 453. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the First United States International Trade Fair, to be held at Chicago, Ill., August 7 through 20, 1950.

On August 14, 1950:

S. 1457. An act to authorize the sale of lands allotted to George C. Estes on the Lower Brule Indian Reservation, S. Dak.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 192) entitled "An act to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCFARLAND, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. CORDON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States numbered 51–4.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN TRUTHFULNESS

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks I have noted an increasing number of speeches inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which have no relationship to any pending legislation but which are obviously designed to be franked for political campaign purposes. Although I believe this privilege can be abused, I voice no objection to such political insertions. It is important that the people know the opinions and views of their representatives.

But I rise at this time to appeal to the Members to stick to the facts in expressing their opinions and not mislead the people. I appeal to the Members not to represent their opinions as facts. Let us have a campaign of truth.

Of course, we have differences of opinion as to what certain facts may mean, and we arrive at different conclusions. It is the clash of opinions that makes campaign issues and makes the wheels of democracy turn. I shall always defend everyone's right to express his opinion, but I strenuously object to any representation of his opinion as a fact.

And I object, Mr. Speaker, to some of the things which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI] said in the political speech he inserted as his own in the RECORD of August 15. I disagree with practically all his conclusions, but it is not that which prompts me to rise. Facts are facts, and I object to their being misrepresented.

In his speech he refers to what the Republican Eightieth Congress did and did not do. He says, for example, that it passed "a tax bill for the relief of the rich and the powerful." That is his opinion. I do not agree with it, but I take no exception to it. But when he represents as a fact that the Republicans took the controls off food and necessities, he is not stating a fact. He surely knows that the President himself took off the controls before the election.

He says the Republicans put the RFC out of business. That simply is not true, and he knows it. He represents as a fact that home construction went down 40 percent. The fact is that we

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 81st CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 96 WASHINGTON, FRIDAY, AUGUST 18, 1950 No. 164

House of Representatives

The House was not in session today. Its next meeting will be held on Monday, August 21, 1950, at 12 o'clock noon.

Senate

FRIDAY, AUGUST 18, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. F. Norman Van Brunt, associate minister, Foundry Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou great indwelling Spirit, who art ever attempting to guide the spirit of man to the realization of abundant life, give us a greater expectancy. Deliver us, we pray, from fears that paralyze the will, and from doubts that breed despair. Let us see Thee, the unchanging, secure foundation upon which we can continue to build a glorious heritage of freedom and fidelity. We need the insight of Thy Spirit and the all-pervading power of Thy love. To this end grant unto us the divine initiative that, as imitators of the Infinite, we may be bearers of light and abundant life to our age. Teach us to look upon our purpose and place in the world with the same sense of mission of the One who staggered the world by the daringness of His faith, the Man of Galilee. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MAYBANK, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 17, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on August 17, 1950, the President had approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 193) to amend section 14 of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended, for the purpose of correcting an error in Public Law 591, Eighty-first Congress.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LEHMAN was excused from further attendance on the session of the Senate today.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, last evening two unanimous-censent agreements were entered into. One agreement was that after a quorum call today the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], who had waited last evening for quite some time, would speak on the road bill. The other agreement was made between the distinguished minority leader and myself, to the effect that he and I would discuss certain amendments which had met with the approval of legislative counsel, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and Senators on this side of the aisle. After conferring with the Senator from Nebraska we decided that we would not discuss the amendments at this time because of the unanimous-consent agreement to vote on Monday, starting at 1 o'clock, for fear that some Senators might think that we were discussing in their absence amendments in which they are interested. With that thought in mind, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska, I should like on his behalf and myself to withdraw the unanimous-consent agreement with respect to our discussion of the amendments, so that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] may proceed with his speech on the road bill, which is the pending business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am in complete sympathy with the suggestion made by the distinguished acting majority leader. I believe the proper procedure would be to ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be vacated, because it has been offered and accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who may wish further information, I should like to state that according to the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, we shall vote on all amendments that may be offered and on the defense production bill itself starting at 1 o'clock on Monday, with a limitation of debate of 5 minutes on each side, and with the understanding that only germane amendments may be offered, with the exception of the so-called Mundt-Ferguson amendment, as to which I do not desire to raise any question of germaneness, but as to which it was distinctly understood that we would vote on it.

I wish to say also for the benefit of the Senate that we had already agreed, before we entered into the unanimous-consent agreement, to about 15 amendments, which were merely clarifying amendments. Between 45 and 50 amendments have been submitted. After conference with the legislative counsel until late last evening and again this morning from 8 o'clock until I came to the Chamber, we find there are about 10 amendments which have been offered by the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Florida, and the Senator from Massachusetts, which are acceptable to the committee. I understand, of course, that on Monday when we commence voting on the amendments and the bill, the Senator who is first recognized can offer his amendments. I merely wish to say that I should like to dispose first of the amendments which have been agreed upon, because in that way I think we shall save a considerable amount of time.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest that the Senator from South Carolina assemble the amendments to which he has reference, and when he is recognized he can present them at one time.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I want to do. Of course, I appreciate the fact that any Senator who gets recognition can present his amendment. I shall present some 10 or 12 amendments, if that is agreeable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point there be printed in the RECORD a memorandum prepared by the legislative counsel on the extent to which price and wage controls are tied together in Senate bill 3936.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR MAYBANK

This memorandum discusses the extent to which price and wage controls are tied together in S. 3936. Price and wage controls with respect to industries producing or handling materials important to the national defense, or significantly affecting the cost of living, are authorized, except at the retail level, by section 402 (b) of the bill. Price and wage controls generally are authorized by section 402 (c).

Both of these subsections require the issuance of orders prohibiting increases in wages (except when necessary to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of the act) whenever an increase in wages would either require an increase in a price ceiling, or impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling. There is a certain amount of flexibility in these provisions. Wage increases which would neither require price increases nor impose an undue burden on a seller could be allowed. Thus, in an industry where profit margins are large, wages might be allowed to rise to the extent of wiping out a large part of such margin so long as the President determined that such increases did not impose an undue burden on the seller. The committee report (last full paragraph on p. 32) indicates that if the seller is left a fair and reasonable profit he probably has not been subjected to an undue burden. The President could also permit promotions, merit increases, increases in incentive payments and similar wage increases which he determined did not impose such an undue burden. It is argued that in some instances such increases might actually result in lowered costs for the seller of an article. The committee evidently felt that some wage increases might be desirable to prevent inequities or to effectuate the purposes of the act, even though such increases might require increases in price ceilings; and the President is authorized to permit such increases. Thus the President might permit increases in defense industries, if necessary to enable them to obtain workers. And if such increases rendered inequitable wages in nondefense industries, conceivably the President might permit increases in such nondefense industries, also.

In addition to requiring restrictions on increases in wages which affect the costs of a seller operating under a ceiling price, the President is authorized generally to stabilize wages to effectuate the purposes of the act. Furthermore, section 402 (c) provides that wages shall be stabilized generally whenever price ceilings have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living. In such case the President would be stabilizing wages because of their inflationary effect upon purchasing power as well as because of their inflationary effect upon a seller's costs.

It is seen, therefore, that an attempt has been made to tie price and wage ceilings together, but that wage increases could be made in some cases where prices are controlled. As the committee points out in the paragraph beginning at the bottom of page 33 of the report:

While the general parallelism of price and wage controls has been preserved, it is not the intention of the committee that price and wage controls should be thought of as coextensive in all cases. There will be occasions when one needs to be applied without the other. For example, it is not the committee's intention that the exemptions from price control as provided in subsection 402 (f) should imply in all cases a corresponding exemption from wage control; nor is it the intention that every case of a controlled price will have its counterpart in controlled wages. The general parallelism is provided to assist in carrying out the purposes of the act, which is the controlling criterion.

Respectfully,

S. E. RICE.

Mr. MAYBANK. So, Mr. President, approximately 32 amendments are to be disposed of. I find that of the 32 amendments, 12 are in the nature of duplicating amendments. That leaves 20 germane amendments to the bill which are to be discussed and voted upon. I merely wished to make that statement for the benefit of Senators so they will know what the situation will be on Monday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to submit a modification of the amendment lettered "I," which, in line 3, would insert the words "to an extent which the President finds will result in a dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market." I ask that the amendment as modified, be printed and lie on the table I may say that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] has joined me in this modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have nothing further to say. I merely wished to advise Senators that probably there will be at least 12 duplicating amendments. In my judgment there will be about 20 amendments to be considered and voted on starting at 1 o'clock Monday. If there is no further discussion about the amendments which are pending before the committee, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WHERRY. I am confident there will be considerable debate today on the control bill and the road bill. I am satisfied that a number of amendments will be brought up today. Therefore, I think Members of the Senate ought to be advised of any motions which the distinguished acting majority leader knows will be made to take up any other measure, so that they may be on the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to assure my distinguished friend that there will be no motion made to consider any bill without first having a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the distinguished acting majority leader know of any contemplation to consider any other bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. There is some contemplation with respect to a bill which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] may desire to have considered. He mentioned three bills.

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, two of those bills would not take very long. However, I do not wish to interfere with the normal program. If debate should lag and time is available, I shall make a motion to consider them. Otherwise, I shall not do so.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the bills which the Senator has mentioned have to do with Indian legislation.

Mr. MCFARLAND. The first two, I think, can be disposed of without much controversy.

Mr. WHERRY. Now that the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] has made his position clear as to the bills which he intends to bring up, if debate on either the control bill or the road bill should run out, is it the intention of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to bring up the so-called mineral bill? If so, I know that Members of the Senate who are interested in the bill would like to be here when it is brought up.

Mr. MAYBANK. As the distinguished Senator from Nebraska knows, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] is deeply interested in that bill. It was stated that a motion would be made to proceed to the consideration of the bill. If I am here and such a motion is made I assure the distinguished minority leader that a quorum call will be had, so that all Senators will have an opportunity to be heard.

FEDERAL AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1950

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the pending business is the road bill.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; but let us clear the atmosphere. The pending business is the road bill. There is nothing else before the Senate at the moment, though some individual Senator might want to bring up some other matter during the discussion. Aside from remarks by the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and myself, the road bill has not been discussed up to the present, and it is the purpose of the chairman of the Committee on Public Works, in charge of the bill, to proceed without any lagging whatsoever.

Now I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Is there anything in the unanimous-consent agreement which would prevent the Senate from voting on the road bill at some time this afternoon?

Whereas one of the main Communist efforts now in operation in the United States is the fraudulent world peace appeal launched on the world by the international Communist apparatus of the World Committee in Defense of Peace in Stockholm in March of 1950 and in the United States by the Daily Worker and assorted stooges on May 1 and directed through a so-called peace information center in New York; and

Whereas the sole purpose of this petition is to distract the attention from Stalin's armed aggression by protesting the possible use of atomic weapons, the only field in which the Communist dictatorship has not built up overwhelming superiority over the free world which mistakenly rushed to disarm after the death of Stalin's one-time pal Hitler; and

Whereas, those subscribing to this fraudulent world peace appeal petition are consciously or unconsciously making themselves part of the Communist enemy's sabotage and conquest apparatus: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Executive Board of the Upholsterers' International Union of North America directs this resolution to the attention of the officers, members, families, employees, and friends of the union and asks their cooperation in exposing this Communist maneuver and its sinister purpose and in taking appropriate action against any sponsors of such petition; and be it further

Resolved, That in accord with the mandate of our twenty-sixth biennial convention, this General Executive Board endorses the bill proposed by Congressman WALTER, of Pennsylvania, for complete registration of Communists and their organization in the United States and directs our political education department to consult with friendly political leaders on the possible State and Federal legislation for complete registration, identification, and disclosure of the source of financial and other support by all organizations seeking to influence public opinion in our free and open society in accordance with the recommedations of the 1947 report of the President's Commission on Civil Rights.

CONTINUATION OF RENT CONTROL—RESOLUTION OF BOROUGH COUNCIL OF POTTSTOWN, PA.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Town Council of the Borough of Pottstown, Montgomery County, Pa., requesting continuation of rent control in Pottstown.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION DECLARING NECESSITY FOR EXTENSION OF FEDERAL RENT CONTROLS IN THE BOROUGH OF POTTSTOWN FROM DECEMBER 31, 1950, TO JUNE 30, 1951

Be it and it is hereby resolved by the Burgess and Town Council of the Borough of Pottstown at the regular meeting of Monday, August 14, 1950, That a shortage of rental housing accommodation exists within the Borough of Pottstown, which requires the continuance of rent control beyond December 31, 1950, and that the Office of the Housing Expediter, Washington, D. C., is hereby requested to extend rent control in the Borough of Pottstown from December 31, 1950, to June 30, 1951.

Adopted at the council chamber this 14th day of August A. D. 1950.

THE BURGESS AND TOWN COUNCIL OF THE BOROUGH OF POTTSTOWN.
W. H. REIFSNYDER, President.

Attest:

DOW I. SEARS,
Borough Manager.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following report of a committee was submitted:

By Mr. HUMPHREY, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

S. 3910. A bill relating to the assignment of surplus clerks in the Postal Transportation Service; with amendments (Rept. No. 2371).

INTERIM REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE (REPT. NO. 2370)

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, on behalf of and for the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], who is ill, I ask unanimous consent to submit an interim report of the Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and printed.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I also ask permission to read a statement prepared by the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] regarding the report, which will take only a couple of minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. HUNT. The statement by the Senator from Tennessee reads:

INTERIM REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CRIME IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE PRESENTED FOR AND ON BEHALF OF SENATOR KEFAUVER BY SENATOR HUNT, AUGUST 18, 1950.

While the inquiry of the special Senate Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce may fairly be said to be only getting under full steam, the results of its investigation into criminal affairs in the southern part of Florida so far have been most revealing.

They show very clearly a pattern which many cities in other parts of the country pretty closely duplicate. They show that there are organized gangs of criminals operating widely and that tacitly one gang does not infringe upon or invade the territory or the racket of another. They show that these criminal organizations are rich and powerful enough to buy police protection and political favoritism. They show that in Miami and Miami Beach, where the committee's attention was recently focused, a group of organized criminals had a virtual monopoly on horse-race gambling with an annual take running into millions, a monopoly that only existed because law-enforcement officers chose to look the other way.

The committee's interim report does not paint a pretty picture. From information already in hand, we know that the same situation exists elsewhere in the country. We know, too, that these similar conditions have their roots in the same miasma of corruption.

In the preliminary recommendations contained in the report may lie the answer to some of the problems of control of organized crime. The study is far from complete, however; the final recommendations will seek to offer a fuller remedy for this evil.

I should like to impress on the Senate that we are talking here not merely about gambling and whether it is right or wrong. We are talking about corruption, corruption of those who are sworn to enforce the law and corruption of those who are sworn to administer it. Unless this tide of corruption is stemmed, it can have tragic consequences for all the American people.

These criminal organizations, having accumulated almost astronomically large capital funds, seek an outlet for investment, usually in legitimate businesses.

To these pseudo-legitimate activities they bring, however, the same gangster methods of corruption, intimidation, and strong-arm monopoly that characterize their activities beyond the pale of the law, to the detriment and disadvantage of the honestly legitimate businessman against whom they compete.

At public hearings scheduled to be held in Washington next week, these gangster methods as employed in their so-called legitimate business activities will be brought into the open. They will show that the racketeers continue to cheat, even when they try to pretend themselves respectable. They cheat the Government, they cheat their creditors—they even cheat their friends and business partners. There is really no honor among thieves, as the evidence will prove.

I should also like to point out that the special committee's investigation is in the nature of a two-way street. We are receiving excellent help from a number of the Government's law-enforcement agencies, and in return are making available to them all the information obtained by the committee's own investigators except that which we cannot disclose under Presidential order.

For example, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has been able to obtain information through the committee on the true incomes of some of these racketeers as against smaller incomes reported, and while the committee is really only getting started, it is quite likely the Government, as a result of our investigation thus far, will collect through increased income-tax levies against some of the individuals whose books we have checked many times the $150,000 appropriated to cover the cost of the committee's investigation.

Mr. WILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier today the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] discussed the first report of the Senate Crime Committee. I had prepared a statement which I had intended to read. The sum and substance of it is that we have thus far only scratched the surface, and that we must track down rumors of a tie-up with politics. In conclusion, I said:

I know that it is the intention of my colleagues on the committee and of myself to give to the committee's work all of the possible attention we can.

I ask that the entire statement be printed in the RECORD following the remarks made this morning by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR WILEY COMMENTS ON FIRST REPORT OF SENATE CRIME COMMITTEE—PROMISES "THE HEAT" WILL NOT DIE DOWN

Mr. President, I should like to add a few words by way of supplement to the remarks of the distinguished junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] with regard to the first interim report which has been filed today by the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce.

I believe that my colleagues will be, indeed, interested in this preliminary report because I feel that it fulfills the expectation and the standards of the Senate when it originally passed Senate Resolution 202 back in May.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the able chairman of the committee, the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] who has given to this task his complete devotion, his tireless energy, and his keen ingenuity. May I say a word, too, by way of appreciation to the hard-working members of the staff, headed by Mr. Halley, who have, I believe, done a conscientious job.

WE HAVE THUS FAR ONLY TAPPED SURFACE

It will be obvious to anyone reading the interim report that the biggest job still lies before the crime committee. We have barely tapped the surface of interstate crime. We have but a small legion of investigators and allied police departments and crime commissions, compared to an army of hoodlums in the 48 States.

Let me, however, say a word of warning to the underworld—and I assure you that it does not consist of mere words—behind it, there is genuine intent and purpose. If the underworld expects to lie low until presumably this special Senate committee expires next year, if the underworld expects to take it easy until the heat is off and escape punishment, it has another think coming. If it expects that this is strictly a one-shot investigation, which will help nab a few hoodlums and then pass into limbo, then I believe it will soon change its mind.

Regardless of the length of the Senate Crime Committee, I know that it is the intention of the chairman, of my colleagues and of myself to lay, by legislation and otherwise, insofar as possible, a permanent basis for the continuing war against organized crime. We will be helped in that task if my suggestion is followed for the activation of crime commissions throughout the country. If in each major city of our Nation wherever crime flourishes, there could be a crime commission (as in Miami, Chicago, etc.) independent nonpartisan groups of civic-minded individuals who have hired the most expert crime-hunting staff possible, then organized crime would be dealt a crippling and more lasting blow.

WE MUST TRACK DOWN RUMORS OF TIE-UPS WITH POLITICS

For a long time, there have been ugly rumors about the interrelation between the underworld and State and National politics. The first interim report outlines very clearly the relation between the underworld and local politics, particularly in the Florida region. It is my intention and that of the committee to follow up on these rumors and reports of a tie-up between national politicians, crooked party leaders, and individuals representing illegitimate pursuits. Obviously, the tie-up is not a direct one. Obviously it is veiled through financial contributions by intermediaries and intermediary companies for services rendered. But these rumors are too prevalent, they are too destructive of public faith in the general integrity of the Government to be allowed to go unchecked.

Of course, we do not intend to honor malicious rumors, smear attacks, purely partisan hate programs. The chairman of the committee has followed a model course of fairness in his assemblying of evidence and that policy will of course continue.

I for one want to learn the details of more instances like that cited on page 8, the purchase of 10 tickets to a Democratic fundraising dinner, $2,500 worth on behalf of the now convicted gambler Frank Erickson. Participation by gamblers or the underworld in political (Republican or Democratic) parties results in too foul a stench in the nostrils of the American people to tolerate.

CONCLUSION

I know that it is the intention of my colleagues on the committee and of myself to give to the committee's work all of the possible attention we can; subject, of course, to the need for handling our other committee assignments and Senate work. In my own case, I have often found it difficult to fulfill all of my simultaneous obligations on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Senate Judiciary Committee, and the Special Senate Crime Committee, but we will squeeze every available minute that we can out of the 24-hour day for this high purpose.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GREEN:

S. 4064. A bill for the relief of James C. White; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 4065. A bill for the relief of Clarice D'Amico, Chiara Antonucci, Antonietta Angelicola, Carmela Antonucci, Anna Cagnazzo, Olimpia Cibelli, Maria Dachille, Giuliva D'Amico, Lucia Di Foggia, Maria Stella Fatibene, Anna Marino, and Lucia Spinelli; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 4066. A bill to provide for the installation of improvements and facilities needed for the protection, development, and utilization of Federal resources affected by dam and water reservoir projects constructed by the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (by request):

S. 4067. A bill to amend section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WATKINS:

S. 4068. A bill for the relief of Dr. Aristides E. Boletas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 4069. A bill for the relief of Edulji Dinshaw and his sister, Mrs. Bachoo Dinsha Woronzow; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 4070. A bill for the relief of Gloria Wilson; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WHERRY (for himself and Mr. SPARKMAN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3936, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. FULBRIGHT submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3936, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. MILLIKIN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3936, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the amendment by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the explanatory statement of the amendment will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. MAYBANK is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAYBANK

This amendment arises from a recommendation contained in Secretary of Defense Johnson's letter of August 11, 1950, relating to section 301 (c), page 34, lines 19–21, wherein the Federal Reserve Board is authorized to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

Secretary Johnson's letter to the chairman of your committee pointed out that this language is not in accord with the practice which prevailed so successfully in World War II, and places an agent in the position of prescribing to its principal on important matters relating to the principal's financial commitments.

Because of the need for coordination of thought on this matter, I asked the committee staff to secure the joint thoughts of the counsel for the Federal Reserve Board and representatives of the Department of Defense. Their discussions resulted in complete agreement on the desirability of this amendment.

This amendment will restore the balance of authority as it existed under Executive Order 9112 during the past war and will give to the guaranteeing agencies the authority to prescribe their forms and procedures after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, subject to the requirement that there must be uniformity to the extent practicable.

Mr. MAYBANK. I also submit amendments intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocation for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement explaining the amendments, prepared by me, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MAYBANK

These amendments would extend the V-loan type guaranty provided for in section 301 of the bill and the direct loans provided for in section 302 of the bill to contracts and operations providing for the performance of services. Those sections now apply only to contracts or operations providing for the production and delivery of materials. I do not believe that the committee intended to exclude contracts and operations involving the performance of services from these provisions. Service contracts which this amendment would provide for would include contracts for the transportation of military personnel or of goods previously delivered, management contracts, surveying and map-making contracts and research contracts. I think the importance of expediting such contracts is obvious and I hope that the amendments will be adopted.

The amendments would also make it clear that contracts with nonprofit research corporations would be covered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement which I have prepared with reference to certain amendments to the Defense Production Act of 1950.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, there is a movement to incorporate in the Defense Production Act of 1950 certain amendments which if adopted will completely wreck any chance this legislation has of working.

1. The first proposal being sponsored by the so-called agricultural bloc will exempt certain agricultural commodities including wheat, corn, peanuts, cotton, and potatoes from any prospective roll-back in prices to the level prevailing prior to June 24. Under this provision not only will the Government continue to hoard and destroy food products, but actually they will be buying these products at an even higher price than prevailed prior to the outbreak of hostilities.

2. The second proposal is one under which the President—notwithstanding any subsequent wage freeze—will be given the power to authorize wage increases in any industry which he decides can absorb such increase without necessitating a price increase in their products.

Mr. President, there is no such thing as a wage increase which does not result in increased cost of manufactured articles. The argument is being advanced that some of our industries are enjoying profit margins adequate to absorb additional wage increases without compensatory price increases, but I point out that any extra earnings which some corporations might have now will be more than taken care of in the proposed new tax bill which is coming before us next week.

This bill was designed as an enabling act to rebuild our national defense and provide safeguards against the imminent threat of inflation, but I warn the Senate that if in the name of political expediency we allow these exemptions for special groups it will defeat the primary purpose of the bill.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL-AID ROAD ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. CHAVEZ, from the Committee on Public Works, submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7941, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKSON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7941, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] and myself, I submit amendments intended to be proposed by us, jointly, to the bill (H. R. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendments and an explanatory statement of the amendments prepared by me be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the amendments and the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments submitted by Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. HOEY) are as follows:

On page 17, line 24, beginning with the colon, strike out down through "Secretary of Commerce" on page 18, line 12.

On page 18, line 17, strike out "$13,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$16,000,000"; and in line 18, commencing with the colon, strike out down through "Provided further" in line 4 on page 19, and insert in lieu thereof "Provided."

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. GRAHAM is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR GRAHAM

This amendment will do two things: First it will eliminate dual administration and concentrate in the Secretary of the Interior the responsibility of determining the priority of work and approving the individual road and parkways projects within the areas which have always been under the jurisdiction and administration of the Department of Interior. Dual administration by two departments is not sound administration. This amendment for placing responsibility in the Secretary of the Interior would be in accordance with plan No. 3 providing for the reorganization of the Department of the Interior as set forth in the Reorganization Act of 1949.

Second, it would provide for the completing several gaps in the Blue Ridge Parkway. The Federal Government has made a heavy investment in this parkway. It is fake economy to have these dirt gaps in the parkway. It is similar to the failure to put buttons on a valuable overcoat. The lack of buttons impairs the value of the whole overcoat. The dirt gaps in the parkway are similar to the missing buttons on the overcoat. This project is not a new, but is an old project which needs completion. This parkway is a protected highway along the mountain backbone of eastern America and leads from an area where live over 50,000,000 people who seek recreation in the great mountains and parks of Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee.

Furthermore, it is a highway which leads from eastern America to the region where is situated the great Federal hospital for veterans at Oteen, TVA, and the Oak Ridge Laboratories. It is important that this strategic road be completed and kept open in the interest of national defense.

The Bureau of the Budget and the President recommended $20,000,000, this House passed $13,000,000 and then the Senate earmarked $3,000,000 of the $13,000,000 for the Baltimore-Washington project, thus in effect taking $3,000,000 away from the $13,000,000 in the House bill.

With this $3,000,000 of the House bill restored, the total would still be $4,000,000 under the recommendation of the President and Budget Bureau.

This amendment is in the interest of sound administration, real economy and the national defense.

H. R. 7941—Federal-aid highway bill—sec. 4

	Bureau of Budget recommended—	House bill amount	Senate committee recommended—	Senators Graham and Hoey amendment
Sec. 4 (a). Park roads	$15,000,000	$10,000,000	$10,000,000	$10,000,000
Sec. 4 (b). Parkways	20,000,000	[1] 13,000,000	[2] 13,000,000	[3] 16,000,000

[1] Baltimore-Washington Parkway not included as it was not an authorized project when House bill was passed.
[2] Of which $3,000,000 earmarked for contract authorization on Baltimore-Washington Parkway.
[3] Of which $3,000,000 earmarked for contract authorization on Baltimore-Washington Parkway.

The amount recommended $16,000,000 for parkways, is $4,000,000 below the President's recommendation of $20,000,000 as given by the Bureau of the Budget (p. 371 of the Senate subcommittee hearings on the Federal-aid highway bill).

In effect it restores the item to the amount passed by the House since at the time the bill passed the House the Baltimore-Washington Parkway had not been authorized, and it could not be expected that any portion of the $13,000,000 would be available for that project.

Funds authorized by this bill for parkways will be used to complete gaps in sections, some of which (Blue Ridge Parkway, for example) have been under construction since 1935. The completion of these gaps will enable long units to be paved and utilized as passenger-car routes, supplementing the heavily used highways, which are more suitable to truck use.

Blue Ridge Parkway gaps to be completed are:

1. Grandfather Mountain, North Carolina section, 15 miles.

2. Deep Gap, North Carolina section, 5 miles.

Completion of these two gaps will open up a continuous unit of 190 miles from near Roanoke, Virginia to Asheville, N. C.

3. James River, Virginia section, 11 miles (including James River Bridge). Completion of this gap will open up a 108-mile unit from Shenandoah North Park to Roanoke, Va.

Work on other parkways will be accomplished in similar fashion to open up long usable units for public use. Sections already built will be paved, and the effect will be to provide additional routes for passenger cars, enabling heavier use of highways by trucks. The construction proposed on the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, for example, will provide a much-needed new passenger-car route in addition to its strategic value to national defense as brought out in the Senate subcommittee hearings. Also, the parkway would provide an easily protected route through Virginia and North Carolina to the TVA developments near the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The President's letter to Senator CHAVEZ did not include sections 4 (a) and (b) which concerns park roads and parkways.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I submit amendments intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the amendments and a telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the explanatory statement and telegram will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The explanatory statement and telegram presented by Mr. MAYBANK are as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAYBANK

EFFECT OF AMENDMENT TO H. R. 7941

The Secretary of the Army may condemn and require improvements of any bridge which unreasonably obstructs the free navigation of any navigable waters of the United States. In order to provide Federal funds to aid in the alteration of such bridges, Congress passed Public Law 647, Seventy-sixth Congress entitled "An act to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes," also known as the Truman-Hobbs Act. The definition of the type of bridge which could be aided by Federal funds, however, was limited to railroad bridges or bridges which carry combined railroad and highway traffic. Therefore, when the Secretary of the Army has by order required alterations of bridges used exclusively for highway traffic because they obstruct the navigable waters of the United States, Federal funds cannot be made available under this act. This amendment would redefine the term "bridge" in the Truman-Hobbs Act to include one used exclusively for highway traffic. Thus, where the Secretary has by order determine that such a bridge obstructs free navigation on any navigable water of the United States, substantive authorization would be provided for the expenditure of appropriated Federal funds for the cost of improvements in accordance with the terms of such act. This amendment requires no provision authorizing appropriations for such purpose inasmuch as the Truman-Hobbs Act, which is being amended by this amendment, carries its own authorization for the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to carry out its provisions.

This amendment would also redefine the term "bridge owner" in the Truman-Hobbs Act. The present act does not include a State, municipality, or other political subdivision, as an owner of a bridge used exclusively for highway traffic. The amendment would include such within the definition of a "bridge owner."

Finally, this amendment would amend section 13 of the Truman-Hobbs Act by striking out the words "used for railroad traffic." Section 13, at present, allows Federal funds to be used where a relocation or a construction of a new bridge at a new location is deemed advisable by the owner of a bridge used for railroad traffic and the Secretary of the Army. The cost would be apportioned between the bridge owner and the United States as provided in section 6 of the Truman-Hobbs Act. This amendment would also make these funds available in the case of bridges used exclusively for highway traffic.

COLUMBIA, S. C., August 17, 1950.

Hon. BURNET R. MAYBANK,
United States Senate:

Retel House bill 7941 we would prefer Senate Committee on Public Works version if you can get it amended as referred to in my letter to you of July 27, to eliminate the provision requiring State highway departments to set up secondary programs units in their organizations and also the requirement that highway departments must hold public hearings before city bypass routes could be built. If you cannot get these two objectionable provisions eliminated we would prefer to go back to the bill as passed by the House.

C. R. MCMILLAN,
Chief, Highway Commissioner, South Carolina Highway Department.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

Sundry postmasters.

THE BIPARTISAN FOREIGN POLICY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR JENNER

[Mr. WHERRY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of the bipartisan foreign policy of the United States, delivered by Senator JENNER before the Rotary Club of Indianapolis, Ind., on Tuesday, August 15, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask to have a correction made in the RECORD of Wednesday, August 16, on page 12809. The Official Reporters apparently misunderstood me, and inserted as a quotation part of my own statement. I have marked the place where the error occurred, and ask to have it corrected.

Likewise, in the third column of the same page, the name "Formosa" was included, and should have been omitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The corrections will be made.

SENATOR HAYDEN OF ARIZONA

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, for 18 years I have been privileged to know the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. He told me this morning that he was leaving for Arizona, I believe tomorrow, to give an account of his stewardship to his constituents prior to the primary election on September 12.

While I have known the Senator from Arizona for a long time, I really did not know, until I became a Member of the Senate, of the high esteem and the warm affection in which he is held by Members of this body on both sides of the aisle.

While I have enjoyed good health all my life, and take a pardonable pride in the ability to do hard and sustained work, I did not know the real meaning of sustained work until I labored with the Senator from Arizona on the Committee on Appropriations.

Of course it is not appropriate for any Member of this body to attempt to inject himself or his views into a primary contest in another State, but I feel justified in saying at this time what my predecessor, Carter Glass, once said. After serving for a number of years on the Committee on Appropriations with Senator HAYDEN, Senator Glass said:

If Virginia should ever be permitted to have three Senators, I should certainly make every effort to get CARL HAYDEN as the third Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to join in the remarks of my plied to secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, rural free delivery mail roads, and public school bus routes, and the debate shows clearly that the rural free delivery mail roads and public school bus routes referred to were certainly not mail roads and bus routes that were located on the primary highways, but rather those on the unimproved county roads.

Further, as to the use of secondary funds, the Federal Highway Act of 1944 provides: "secondary and feeder roads" means "roads in rural areas, including farm-to-market roads, rural mail routes, and school bus routes, and not on the Federal-aid system." The 1948 Federal-Aid Act brings these provisions forward and expressly states that the definition of secondary feeder roads shall include county and township roads. The sole purpose of the above-numbered sections of the act of 1950 is to channel this money to roads of the county level as the previous legislation clearly shows it was originally intended, and thus stop the present practice in some States of using all of this money on a very few miles of very expensive highways.

In your letter you say in effect that Hon. D. C. Greer, president, American Association of State Highway Officials, opposes sections 1 (b) and 2. This is not true. Mr. Greer approves these sections, was consulted in their drafting, came by my office last week, and has also written a letter to the State highway departments asking their cooperation in the passage of the Senate bill.

Your statement that says in effect that the United States Department of Commerce opposes these provisions of the bill is not true. Hon. Thomas H. MacDonald, our valued Commissioner of Public Roads, certainly speaks for the United States Department of Commerce in highway legislation. He gave valuable testimony before the committee, upon which sections 1 (b) and 2 are largely drafted, and gave as his opinion that a much larger percentage of said funds should be channeled to the county level class. (See pp. 504 and 541 of the 1950 Senate Public Works Committee hearings.) Also, Hon. F. R. White, nationally known authority on public roads and highways, and presently chief engineer of the Iowa State Highway Commission, has expressed approval of these sections.

As to the county officials, I have not had a chance to contact Mr. M. W. Forman whom you mentioned, but in my opinion these sections are entirely in line with his testimony, as the sections are within the general framework of the present law. At the hearings, Mr. L. W. Newcomer and Mr. Ben T. Collier, county officials and engineers, gave testimony upon which these sections were later in part drafted. I have unqualified endorsement in my files for these sections by the National Farm Bureau Federation and the National Milk Producers Federation.

All in all, your criticism seems to be directed at section 12 of S. 3424, which was brought forward in the Senate version of H. R. 7941.

The over-all effect of your letter is to try to overturn the definite policy established by the Highway Act of 1936 and subsequent acts, and leave all agricultural areas of the country entirely out of the Federal-aid program, except those actually adjacent to the principal highways. I also note that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States had a witness appear at the Senate hearings on this bill (see p. 12 of the Senate Public Works Committee hearings on the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1950). This witness did not oppose funds in the bill for urban highways, nor for the primary highways, nor for the secondary highways as now used, but regarding the section dealing exclusively with rural roads, he denounced it as "just plain national socialism."

I also think it pertinent to point out that your witness there said that he represented "the oil interests, the bus and truck interests, automobile interests—and I may add, insurance interests and also highway road contracting interests—and of course, many private owners of automobiles." It is clear that neither you nor your witness nor your association is thinking of those people who live in agricultural communities away from the arterial highways. It would be interesting to note here that during the last war, from a defense standpoint, 67 percent of all farm car travel was found to be essential, whereas only 53 percent of the automobile travel of other classes was considered essential, thus showing that farm-to-market roads are the supply line of our Nation as to farm products.

I call your attention again to the fact that sections 1 (b) and 2 are within the framework of the present system of Federal programs for the use of secondary funds; that no new mileage is added to the system, and the handling of specifications is left as heretofore; that the selection of the projects is left with local and State authorities; and the method of matching is the same. Provision is even made that if for any reason in any State it should be impractical to use the funds on the county highway level, that as much as 100 percent of the funds can be used on even the highest type and most expensive highways. I repeat, these provisions of the Highway Act of 1950 merely make clearer and more definite the expressed purposes of the Federal-Aid to Highways Act of 1936 and subsequent acts.

As your letter was addressed to all Members of the United States Senate, I am going to insert a copy of your letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, together with a copy of my reply, all for the information of the Members of the Congress and the people of the Nation at large.

Very truly yours,

JOHN C. STENNIS,
United States Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point copies of letters recently received from the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Milk Producers Association.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., July 19, 1950.

Hon. JOHN C. STENNIS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR STENNIS: The action of the Senate Public Works Committee in providing for use of secondary highway funds on local rural roads of the county road class is regarded as a desirable step in the long campaign of farmers and rural communities for adequate rural roads.

The membership of the American Farm Bureau Federation firmly believes that State and local governing bodies should have sole responsibility for determining methods of allocation within each State, as well as standards and specifications for rural road construction.

While the bill does not go as far as we would like it to go in the direction of giving more responsibility to State and local units of government, we regard it as a substantial step in that direction.

Sincerely,

HUGH F. HALL,
Assistant Legislative Director, Washington Office.

NATIONAL MILK PRODUCERS FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1949.

Hon. JOHN C. STENNIS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR STENNIS: For many years the National Milk Producers Federation has been deeply concerned over the slow progress in the improvement of roads in the rural areas of our Nation. Although commendable work has been done in the construction of primary and some secondary roads very little assistance has been given to the construction of local rural roads—the roads over which the farmer must travel to get to the principal roads.

You will recall that we presented testimony early last year to the Subcommittee on Roads of the Senate Committee on Public Works concerning the bills S. 244 and S. 1471. At that time we indicated the importance of good all-weather rural roads to the American farmer in the production and distribution of agricultural commodities, pointing out that in the case of dairy farmers the characteristics of milk made it imperative that there must be no delay in the movement from the farm to assembly points or processing plants. In our testimony we emphasized the need for legislation providing for decentralized authority in the determination of standards and specifications of local rural roads. It was our opinion that the proposed legislation as contained in S. 244 and S. 1471 offered a solution to the problem.

We were hopeful that on the basis of the persuasive evidence presented by numerous witnesses last year the Senate Committee on Public Works, in considering the bill H. R. 7941, would incorporate substantially the provisions of the former bills. We regret that the committee did not do so in reporting the bill H. R. 7941. However, we are of the opinion that the provisions of section 1 (b) of H. R. 7941 is an acceptable compromise and will make it possible to get off the dead center which has plagued the people in our rural areas in the development of an all-weather, year-around system of local rural roads.

We hope that enactment of the proposed legislation will result in real cooperation by the Commissioner of Public Roads, the various State highway departments, and appropriate local officials in the selection and construction of good local rural roads, with standards and specifications adapted to the need for which the roads are used.

The provision of section 1 (b) is a step in the right direction and we are in support of the proposed legislation and earnestly urge its adoption. At a later date, should the proposed legislation prove inadequate in developing a county system of improved roads which will really serve the rural areas we will again urge the enactment of legislation along the lines of our recommendations made early last year.

The dairy farmer members of the National Milk Producers Federation are appreciative of the sincere efforts made by you and others in endeavoring to secure the enactment of legislation which will give the farmers of our Nation the type of roads they want and to which they are entitled.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. W. HOLMAN,
Secretary.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. KERR obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a brief statement?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, an analysis given to me by the legislative counsel of the United States Senate makes it clear that the pending control bill does not require the President to control wages in the event that price controls are established.

Mr. Baruch emphasized in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency that no price control plan could be effective unless wage control was established coincident with price control. This is unquestionably true, as wages constitute a very large part of the cost of all manufactured articles and agricultural products.

I announced my support of price ceilings providing wages were controlled simultaneously with prices. This the pending bill does not require the President to do, and is so worded as to leave to his own determination whether his failure to establish wage control would constitute an undue burden upon companies producing articles upon which he places price ceilings.

The main purpose of this legislation is to prevent inflation. It would be a farce to pass a bill that does not make wage control mandatory when price controls are established. Such a course would not stop inflation and may result very disastrously to our economic system.

For myself, I cannot support any legislation that does not effectively establish both controls coincident one with the other. I am fortified in this opinion by the statement from the legislative counsel of the Senate.

I hope on Monday the Senate will amend the bill which is the unfinished business in this respect and further provide for a definite expiration date of July 1, 1951, thus enabling a review by the next Congress.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a copy of the analysis of Senate bill 3936, as prepared at my request by the Senate legislative counsel.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR BYRD BY MR. STEPHEN E. RICE OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL

This memorandum discusses the extent to which price and wage controls are tied together in S. 3936. Price and wage controls with respect to industries producing or handling materials important to the national defense, or significantly affecting the cost of living, are authorized, except at the retail level, by section 402 (b) of the bill. Price and wage controls generally are authorized by section 402 (c).

Both of these subsections require the issuance of orders prohibiting increases in wages (except when necessary to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of the act) whenever an increase in wages would either require an increase in a price ceiling, or impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling. There is a certain amount of flexibility in these provisions. Wage increases which would neither require price increases nor impose an undue burden on a seller could be allowed. Thus, in an industry where profit margins are large, wages might be allowed to rise to the extent of wiping out a large part of such margin so long as the President determined that such increases did not impose an undue burden on the seller. The committee report (last full paragraph on page 32) indicates that if the seller is left a fair and reasonable profit he probably has not been subjected to an undue burden. The President could also permit promotions, merit increases, increases in incentive payments, and similar wage increases which he determined did not impose such an undue burden. It is argued that in some instances such increases might actually result in lowered costs for the seller of an article. The committee evidently felt that some wage increases might be desirable to prevent inequities or to effectuate the purposes of the act, even though such increases might require increases in price ceilings; and the President is authorized to permit such increases. Thus the President might permit increases in defense industries, if necessary to enable them to obtain workers. And if such increases rendered inequitable wages in nondefense industries, conceivably the President might permit increases in such nondefense industries, also.

In addition to requiring restrictions on increases in wages which affect the costs of a seller operating under a ceiling price, the President is authorized generally to stabilize wages to effectuate the purposes of the act. Furthermore, section 402 (c) provides that wages shall be stabilized generally whenever price ceilings have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living. In such case, the President would be stabilizing wages because of their inflationary effect upon purchasing power as well as because of their inflationary effect upon a seller's costs.

It is seen, therefore, that an attempt has been made to tie price and wage ceilings together, but that wage increases could be made in some cases where prices are controlled. As the committee points out in the paragraph beginning at the bottom of page 33 of the report:

"While the general parallelism of price and wage controls has been preserved, it is not the intention of the committee that price and wage controls should be thought of as coextensive in all cases. There will be occasions when one needs to be applied without the other. For example, it is not the committee's intention that the exemptions from price control as provided in subsection 402 (f) should imply in all cases a corresponding exemption from wage control; nor is it the intention that every case of a controlled price will have its counterpart in controlled wages. The general parallelism is provided to assist in carrying out the purposes of the act, which is the controlling criterion.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me so I may ask the able Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator from Virginia says he hopes the bill will be amended. I should like to inquire whether the Senator is having prepared an amendment which he believes will satisfactorily amend the bill?

Mr. BYRD. It is my understanding that amendments will be prepared and offered.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, we will be given the opportunity to vote for proper amendments to make certain that the two elements of the economy are geared together?

Mr. BYRD. Amendments will certainly be offered which will gear the two together.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia that I join him in hoping that we will pass that kind of legislation. I do not want to see one element of the economy controlled and another element not controlled, and thus not actually prevent inflation.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, the pending road bill is, in my opinion, of great importance, not only as it affects the peacetime economy of the Nation, but also wartime conditions. It was my privilege to serve as a member of the subcommittee which held hearings with reference to the bill, and while I spent less time attending the hearings than some other members of the committee, I was present on many days of hearings. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], and other Senators, however, spent weeks in attendance at the hearings. The greatest consideration was given to the needs of the country, the wishes of the people, and the responsibility of the Government with reference to both.

There was laid before the committee a letter from the Bureau of the Budget, which referred to the message of the President at the beginning of the year at which time an arbitrary figure of $500,000,000 was fixed as being the amount that should be the limit to be spent for certain classifications of Federal participation in the building of roads. The letter from the Bureau of the Budget to the committee was written in May. I repeat that the position of the executive branch of the Government, the President and the Bureau of the Budget, was that $500,000,000 should be the limit for those items in the road bill.

Yesterday there came to the chairman of the Public Works Committee, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], a letter from the President in which reference was made to the Korean emergency and the situation which confronted the country because of developments in Korea. The letter set forth that, based upon the needs for national defense, based upon the emergency that had arisen by reason of the Korean situation, the President took the position that $500,000,000 should be the limit in this bill for the items referred to.

It seems to be rather a coincidence that now in August, in the presence of the emergency, the need for certain items of road building, insofar as the Federal Government is concerned, must not exceed the same magic figure of $500,000,000 which was the oft-repeated figure for these particular items mentioned by the President and by the Bureau of the Budget long before the Korean situation was heard of, dreamed of, or contemplated.

However, in pursuance of the request in that letter, consideration was again given to that subject by the committee, and, as the distinguished chairman of the committee has advised the Senate, cepted, because, while he would naturally prefer the larger sum for his constituent, he recognizes that unless the House amendment is agreed to, this legislation might very well fail to pass before the end of the session.

Accordingly I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 1320.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

A. K. CHAHROUDI

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House with respect to Senate bill 2457.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2457) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. K. Chahroudi which was, on page 1, line 8, after "court," insert a comma and "notwithstanding any statute of limitation."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a bill to give the claimant his day in court by granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the controversy.

The House has amended the bill by inserting a specific provision that this action may be brought notwithstanding any statute of limitation.

Since the bill by its terms limits the bringing of the action to the period of 6 months following the date of approval of the act, there appears to be no objection to this House amendment.

Accordingly, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to the bill S. 2457.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. SEBENICK—CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT OF BILL

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, S. 3059 is a bill to provide for payment to John J. Sebenick, a former lieutenant, junior grade, in the United States Naval Reserve, a sum equal to his pay and allowances for 34 additional days of terminal leave. The board, for the correction of naval records, has ordered its records corrected to show his entitlement to this leave pay. The committee amended the bill to add the usual proviso limiting attorney's fees to 10 percent. When the amendment was made the following words: "By any agent or attorney on account of services rendered" were inadvertently omitted from the proviso. As the bill now reads, it is subject to the technical interpretation that no more than 10 percent of the amount authorized in the bill may be paid to the claimant. The enrolled bill is now at the White House.

The concurrent resolution which I now send to the desk requests the President of the United States to return said enrolled bill to the Senate and, upon its return, the action of the presiding officers of the two Houses signing said bill shall be deemed rescinded. It further provides that the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "received" on page 2, line 2, the words: "By any agent or attorney on account of services rendered."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 101) was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States is requested to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 3059) for the relief of John J. Sebenick. If and when said bill is returned by the President, the action of the presiding officers of the two Houses in signing said bill shall be deemed rescinded; and the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed, in the reenrollment of said bill, to make the following correction: On page 2, line 2, following the word "received", insert the words "by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understand it is quite in order to have the bill sent back.

Mr. McCARRAN. It follows the precedent, and is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 101) was considered and agreed to.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal-aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be offered by myself, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], to H. R. 7941, the Federal-aid highway bill.

In order that Senators may know what my proposal comprehends, may I say that this amendment will make immediately available upon passage of the Federal Aid Highway Act the necessary authority to begin construction on vitally needed links on main highways located entirely with public domain lands. I shall not take the time of the Senate with great explanation, since the bill as it stands before the Senate now authorizes the appropriation of $5,000,000 per year for a period of 2 years to construct and maintain main roads passing through wholly federally owned lands.

My amendment would make it possible that construction might begin immediately on such roads.

To cite one case, let me say this amendment would allow completion of a transcontinental highway, U. S. 6, which now has only 47.4 miles of its 3,000 miles uncompleted. This link lies in eastern Utah, and extends from the Utah line westerly across the State of Nevada and southward to the Pacific coast.

This incomplete link is important to the military security of our Pacific coast. In the State of Utah and surrounding Salt Lake City, there are many military facilities. These facilities manufacture small arms and other armament of various kinds. Also located in that immediate area are Hill Field, one of the three largest air bases in America; the important Clearfield, Utah, naval supply depot; the Army supply depot at Hill Field; and the Tooele, Utah, ordnance depot which stores wartime chemicals and munitions. There is the mammoth steel plant at Provo, Utah, and the large chemical warfare depot at the Dugway Proving Grounds.

The city of Salt Lake lies in a basin and is connected to the Pacific coast directly by one main highway—Highway 40. This area needs another route to relieve Highway 40 from its terrific burden. Likewise, if military activity rendered useless this highway, it would be impossible for military traffic to reach the west coast from the Salt Lake City area except by long routes through Idaho to the north, or south through Arizona. Highway 6 would provide this vitally needed alternate route. Since the uncompleted section of this highway lies wholly within public domain lands, existing authorizations allow Federal funds to be utilized.

The Public Works Committee received considerable testimony on this subject of highways lying entirely on the Federal domain which have not been improved due to the lack of habitation on such lands and the inability of the States to spread their highway funds far enough to reach such roads. Only a few remaining links lie within this category. I understand these States, in addition to the State of Utah, are Oklahoma, Arkansas, Arizona, New Mexico, and possibly Oregon.

Because of the military necessity of some of these uncompleted links, and the fact that our faces are turned westward now to the Pacific coast as a staging center for vital shipments to the Far East, I hope favorable consideration can be given to the amendment at the proper time.

Precedent for such immediate contract authorization as I propose exists in the highway aid bill as it now stands, in the section dealing with construction of parkways within national parks.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The amendment submitted by Mr. McCARRAN (for himself, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, and Mr. KERR) was received, ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 25, line 19, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That $2,500,000 of the sum authorized for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, shall be available for contract immediately upon the passage of this act."

PROPOSED PRICE AND ALLOCATION CONTROL

Mr. MALONE. The bill S. 3936 to control prices and allocations seems inconsistent at this time due to many factors.

NO FOREIGN POLICY

Chief among these factors being that the Government has no international policy.

No one knows, least of all the Members of the United States Senate, whether or not we intend to stop at the thirty-eighth parallel in the war we are now conducting and which the President chooses to call a police action; whether we will stop at the thirty-eighth parallel and leave a couple of divisions of troops to maintain the division of the Korean Nation, or whether we will push on to the north boundary of Korea and leave a few divisions there to contain Russia.

CONTROL WITHOUT OBJECTIVES

Either seems to be an impossible condition. The President has not named the objective, but is now asking for controls which obviously is not needed at this time if this is truly only a police action.

OVERSUPPLY AT THIS TIME—OPA

Further, Mr. President, if such controls as are described in the bill mean—control of everything from the price of eggs to real estate is to be fastened on this country at this time, when we have more than enough of everything, and when to go into the manufacture of war materials will require several months and an estimated 10 percent of our income the time is not opportune for such controls. The experience of this country through World War II with the OPA, when it was almost impossible to unfasten the Governments tentacles from business following the war, it seems inadvisable to put into the hands of the President of the United States the right to interfere at any time and the right to fasten such controls at random, as he may see fit to the business life of the Nation.

SENATE SUBJECT TO CALL—24 HOURS

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States will shortly complete its principal work for the year. One suggestion is that we adjourn 3 days at a time. Another suggestion is that we might adjourn subject to the call of the President, the majority or minority leaders.

In either case the Members of the Congress of the United States are within 24 hours of Washington any place in the United States of America.

NO SUCH EMERGENCY

Mr. President, I submit that no such emergency exists at this time as to warrant any such political authority be given to the President of the United States, or for the Congress to divorce itself entirely from this date on, from having any part in deciding either as to the time or extent of the regulation that may later be needed.

STORED FOOD AVAILABLE

Mr. President, when we speak of food, for example, I want to say that the United States of America has stored in caves and warehouses and in various other types of storage a total of $2,295,600,000 worth of food, from Maine to California. This is at least a partial list of such food:

Butter, 192,000,000 pounds, $100,000,000. Dried milk, 322,000,000 pounds, $50,000,000. Cheese, 80,000,000 pounds, $25,000,000. Dried eggs, 170,000,000 pounds, $150,000,000. Cotton 2,551,000 bales, $432,000,000. Corn 325,000,000 bushels, $500,000,000. This is about the amount of money, Mr. President, asked for to build roads in the entire country, as we heard in the debate a few minutes ago. Wheat, 32,000,000 bushels, $797,000,000. Flax seed, 16,000,000 bushels, $88,600,000. Linseed oil, 502,000,000 pounds, $153,000,000.

GOVERNMENT DISPOSING OF FOOD 10 CENTS ON THE DOLLAR

Mr. President, that probably does not include a great deal of miscellaneous material stored here and there, and bought up under the Government program. We read in the newspapers in the last few weeks that the Government is making a great effort to get rid of this food; to ship it to foreign countries at 2 cents, 5 cents, and 10 cents on the dollar. As a matter of fact, if we are anywhere near the condition the bill would indicate, that some of the Members of Congress and the President seems to think we are in, now is the time to save this food.

CREDIT CONTROLS

Mr. President, we need credit controls. We need better control of the inflationary factors by the Federal Reserve Board.

We know that price control cannot work—it creates cheats and chiselers—it creates competition with the Government instead of cooperation.

Mr. President, an article by Edward H. Collins in the August 8 issue of the New York Times is a well written and well thought out outline of some of the pitfalls of regulation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article may appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRICE-WAGE CONTROLS IN PERSPECTIVE

(By Edward H. Collins)

Perhaps the most charitable thing that can be said of those Congressmen who engaged in last week's stampede for an immediate freezing of prices and wages is that they are lamentably in need of a course in memory training.

There is no other logical explanation for the two basic misconceptions which seem to have been implicit in their actions. One of these is the belief that the economic problem posed by the 1950 defense program at this stage is roughly analogous to that which we faced in World War II; the other is the singularly naive idea that earlier experience with such controls was a brilliant and unqualified success. It should hardly be necessary to point out that neither assumption has any warrant in historical fact.

Mr. Truman has pointed out that the new military-expansion program would account for only about 10 percent of our present national product of nearly $270,000,000,000. This means—to state it in somewhat oversimplified terms—that even when the program actually gets under way, which will not be for several months, 90 percent of our productive energies will still be available to serve the Nation's civilian needs. This, it should be added, is 90 percent of a production potential $100,000,000,000 larger than that of 1939.

To bring this picture into perspective, let us refresh our memories briefly on the general character and magnitude of the World War II effort. In that war we retooled most of our heavy peacetime industries, expanded them enormously, and transformed them into one gigantic, coordinated munitions industry. As early as October 1942, we were pouring 50 percent of our national income into war production. A year later the Federal Reserve Board repoted that 70 percent of the country's production facilities were concentrated on winning the war. Winning the war meant, among other things, raising, equipping, transporting, and feeding an American armed force of nearly twelve million; providing lend-lease aid to our allies at a rate which by the end of 1944 had reached $1,000,000,000 a month, and producing the bulk of the shipping which, with the aid of new combat techniques, made it possible to eliminate the dreaded menace of the German U-boat.

Now the diversion of that much of a nation's economic effort to war calls for cutbacks of major proportions. In this case it meant, to all intents and purposes, the complete stoppage of the production of peacetime consumer durable goods—automobiles, radios, electric refrigerators, and the innumerable household gadgets which have come to be a symbolic adornment of the American way of life. At the same time, an estimated 50 percent of all American food products had to be earmarked for consumption either by our own military forces or by our allies under lead-lease.

The gross national product in this period increased from $91,300,000,000 in 1939 to $213,700,000,000 in 1944. Our over-all production rose therefore at a spectacular rate. Even allowing for this, however, the picture that unfolded was one of a steadily expanding volume of purchasing power at a time when the supply and variety of civilian goods and services were contracting just as steadily. Here, in this rapidly widening divergence of supply and demand—this inflation gap—is to be found the genesis of price and wage controls and the rationing of food in World War II.

To say that these over-all controls were 100 percent effective would be untrue. To say that they were 60 percent effective would probably be an exaggeration. The Bureau of Labor Statistics' index of the cost of living performed, on its face, respectably enough. But that index, for a number of obvious reasons, left unrecorded many things that vitally affected living costs—the black markets, the deterioration in the quality of many standard civilian items, and the fact that many others were unavailable for the simple reason that they weren't being produced. The little-steel formula, which was supposed to represent a sort of Maginot line in the field of wages, was irreparably breached by John L. Lewis in 1943, and from that point forward the War Labor Board found itself fighting a rearguard action against a steady onslaught of demands from the labor unions for higher wages. It is an unpalatable fact that, as against a 1916–35 average of 1,868 labor disputes annually, the numbers in the war period ranged from 2,968 in 1942 to 4,956 in 1944, the latter an all-time high.

In short, price-wage controls were adopted in World War II because in the circumstances no alternative course was available. That they functioned as well as they did is ascribable mainly to two circumstances: (1) The absence of durable consumer goods into which Americans customarily direct their surplus purchasing power, and (2) the patriotic fervor which accompanies an all-out war. Neither of these conditions, of course, is present in the current situation.

RECREATING THE BLACK MARKET

Mr. MALONE. We could supply an army of the size of the one we are now getting together for a considerable time.

Aside from food—and certainly there is a great abundance of food at this time—when we start regulating basic industries of the United States, we simply are recreating the old black-market days.

The minute we give the President the authority now requested, people will be afraid that any morning they may wake up to find that the controls have been imposed. Accordingly many persons hurry to make contracts and to speculate in the basic products; and the result is that we hasten the advent of the very thing we fear the most. The continual immediate threat is almost as bad as the regulation itself. So the black market is created.

PAY THROUGH THE NOSE FOR MATERIAL

Mr. President in World War II, I was not in the Senate, but I was very close to the War Production Board as special consultant to the Senate Military Committee. We remember that at that time citizens of the United States located from 100 to 3,000 miles away from the Capitol soon were paying anywhere from $100 to $2,000 or several thousand dollars depending on the build-up to someone who was either connected with the rationing organization or was close to the administration, in order to get the material they wanted. That practice developed, and the result was that such persons had to pay anywhere from two to three times what the materials they wanted were worth, and the fee in addition.

Mr. President, the enactment of the measure now before us would lead to the recreation of that condition. It is not necessary that we take the steps now proposed at this time.

Furthermore, many persons believe that once an OPA is established it will be most difficult to remove it from our business structure. We all know how long it required to shake off the OPA from the American business structure.

THE OPA

After the OPA was established, those who were employed by that agency attempted to hang on and resisted every attempt to remove them from the Government payroll or abolish the agency. That agency had thousands and thousands of Government employees who scarcely knew any other way to make a living. I remember that at the time when it was proposed that OPA be ended, one argument against ending it was that to end it would create a tremendous unemployment problem.

A LONG PREPAREDNESS SESSION

Mr. President, if this bill is enacted into law and if the system now proposed goes into effect, probably we shall experience—according to the best information we can obtain—a considerable number of years of preparation for war and a good many police actions—which is what the President calls the present action in Korea.

If we do not have a major war for 10 or 15 years, we probably shall be continually in the throes of preparation. If we do have a major war, it may least 20 years; many experts agree that it will not be a short one.

CANNOT SHAKE OFF CONTROLS

Mr. President, as soon as such controls are fastened on our business structure, I predict that it will be almost a miracle if we can shake off our economic structure in your lifetime or mine; I predict that you and I will never see the business structure of our country free again.

With that situation in mind, and realizing that the Members of Congress are always within 24 hours of the Capitol—regardless of whether 3-day recesses are taken or whether an adjournment to the first of the year is taken—the Executive can always call Congress back into session immediately that any real emergency threatens.

EMERGENCY NOT HERE

In view of all the food we now have in storage and all the production we have, I submit there is no threatened shortage, because it is admitted that perhaps not more than 10 percent of the economy of the country will be devoted to meeting the emergency now occurring in Korea.

25 PERCENT STEEL INDUSTRY FOR WORLD WAR II

I wish to say that I have been informed by some of the leaders in the steel industry that not more than 25 percent of the steel production was allocated to war uses during the last war, and at that time our steel industry was operating at a production rate of between 90,000,000 and 100,000,000 tons of steel a year.

BUREAUCRATS NOT CAPABLE

I also wish to say at this point that of course we shall find Government officials—Cabinet officers and bureaucrats of all kinds—who think that all that it is necessary to do is for the Congress to turn over to them the job of handling the basic industries.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS KNOW LITTLE ABOUT IT

Of course, in such case the regulation of steel, for instance, probably would be turned over to some Government official who knows nothing about the steel business; or in the case of petroleum, the regulation of that industry would be turned over to some Government official who knows little or nothing about the petroleum business; and other of the regulating officials would know nothing about the gas business or the coal business or the power business, or very little about any business as a matter of fact. However, once such persons get the ambition to control American business, they claim to understand all the details of the businesses they seek to control. After having been 30 years in the engineering business, Mr. President, I say it is impossible for any one of those men to comprehend all about any one of the businesses I am about to mention, although those bureaucrats think they know everything about all of those businesses.

POWER—ELECTRICAL ENERGY

For instance, in the power business there are today men who have accurate knowledge about every kilowatt of power their business is capable of producing, and how to control it; but those men are constantly engaged in the power business, either in the private power companies or in the municipal companies.

STEEL

Similarly, the men engaged in the steel industry know the corresponding data about their business. The heads of the various steel companies know, within a few hundred tons, the amount of steel their companies can produce in 6 months, and they know exactly what can be done with that steel, the shapes into which it can be formed, and so forth, and so on. However, all their knowledge of their own businesses is insignificant when compared to the knowledge claimed by the bureaucrats and Cabinet members, who will think they know all about those businesses as soon as the Congress and the President direct them to start regulating them.

STORED FOOD—FROM MAINE TO CALIFORNIA

Mr. President, I shall mention only five or six of the basic industries, in addition to the food production industry. Of course we have vast quantities of food stored in caves and warehouses, all the way from Maine to California. Today we are endeavoring to give much of that food to foreign countries.

LUMBER AND WOOD PRODUCTS

I venture to say that in the case of four or five large lumber companies, if we were just to talk on the telephone to the officials of those companies, they could tell us at once the amounts of lumber and the kinds of lumber their companies can produce each month for the next 12 or 24 months.

PETROLEUM

In the case of the petroleum companies, it is obvious that no one understands that business very well, except those who are engaged in handling that business from month to month and from year to year. Even they understand only their particular part of the petroleum business and the particular area in which they are engaged. Even so, they make some mistakes in their own area; but still they know more about it than do any other human beings on earth. However, it seems that in the last few years there has been a growing feeling that anyone who really understands a business is not qualified to have anything to do with it, so far as Government regulation is concerned.

COAL

In the case of coal, it is obvious that the officials of the coal companies can tell us almost exactly how much coal their companies can produce at various times.

BASIC COMMODITIES

In addition to the food industry, the power industry, the steel industry, the lumber and wood products industry, the petroleum industry, the coal industry, and the gas industry comprise the basic areas of American production. The moment an attempt is made to regulate one of them, it is necessary to impose regulations upon all the other basic industries of the Nation; and that action creates the black markets I have mentioned.

PRESIDENT CONTACTS LEADERS

However, if the President of the United States were to get in touch with the officials of the Northwest power companies and the Southwest power companies—and I could state their names for the RECORD—they would be able to tell the President, "If you tell us a few weeks or a few months in advance how much power you want, and where, and when, it will be available; and our customers will get what is left." That is the way those men are able to operate. We finally had to come to operations on that basis during the last war, even after trying to have the great minds in the Government service regulate the power business.

In the steel business we could proceed in exactly the same way. The officials of five or six large steel companies, who know all about the steel business, and the officials of the other basic industries I have mentioned, could almost instantly supply the necessary information to the President, and could be depended upon to have the desired production available when and where wanted; and the President of the United States could, by means of the exercise of the power he now has make all the necessary arrangements with those officials.

DEPEND UPON REAL EXPERTS

So, Mr. President, I say we should let the Government depend upon those who know something about their own businesses—who know how much steel or how much coke or how much coal or how much power or how much lumber and wood products, how much petroleum they can produce, and who can make very accurate predictions, 6 months ahead of time, of the amounts which can be produced, in accordance with the needs under the Government's program.

NO BLACK MARKET

So long as the officials of those industries are permitted to keep their estimates 6 months ahead of deliveries, and so long as the officials of the companies in those industries are kept informed regarding the time and place and amount of the production desired, I venture the assertion that the needed production will be obtained, and without any black-market prices, and without upsetting the entire operations of our domestic structure by the injection of regulation under a bill of the nature of the one now before us.

EXAMPLES OF SUPREME EGOISM

In the last 3 or 4 days I have been attending hearings of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. We discussed control bills, control and ownership of tidewater oil-bearing lands. We have representatives of the Attorney General's office and from the Department of the Interior who testify. They know more about the oil business than any man who ever owned an oil well. Nevertheless, it is only necessary to ask them a question or two in order to learn that they know very little about the subject. The point, however, is that they have authority. To hear some of the testimony we are getting before the committee would make one break down and cry. So, Mr. President, I caution against haste. When we pass a bill of this kind it is only the start.

REGULATION MAY BE NEEDED

Mr. President, I am not today saying that the time will not come when such regulation may be necessary, but let us stop thinking that this regulation was successful in World War II. It lacked a great deal of being successful. While the method I am describing may not be perfect, it is far beyond any regulation by Government officials. I am sure that any Senator on the floor would readily admit that he knows nothing about the regulation of these industries. Nevertheless, by some sort of magic we hear statements on the Senate floor by Senators who apparently seem to think that all we have to do is to pass a law to let some great mind undertake to run the business of the country altogether, and that he can do the job.

EXPERTS OFTEN MAKE MISTAKES

As a matter of fact, experts in the business are worried. They get to their offices early every day and work late, and then make mistakes in their own particular businesses. The proposal is like putting me in charge of a hospital—I know nothing about a hospital so there would be no problems.

WORLD WAR II—EXPERIENCE

It so happens that during the late war I kept close to this subject, I watched thousands of people who had no idea of what they were trying to do, who were working in this field. They had the authority and they made the decisions. It was murderous.

STRATEGIC MINERALS—EXAMPLE

By way of illustration, Mr. President, I may refer to an editorial which appeared yesterday in the New York American. The editorial mentions strategic metals. It reflects what has happened in regard to strategic metals in this country, in the hands of the Government officials, particularly in the hands of the State Department, begun through various conferences, starting at Annecy, France, and which they want to complete, under cover of war, in Tourquay, England, in September.

I shall only touch on the mining business, because, so far as strategic metals are concerned, 70 percent of the mines of the United States have been closed down through the stupid free-trade administration policies, yet we do not have an adequate stockpile of such minerals, and we do not have a going-concern mining industry. What is needed to win a war is an adequate stockpile, and a going concern, a mining industry. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the editorial appearing in the New York Journal-American of August 17, 1950—relative to the availability of such strategic minerals.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STRATEGIC METALS

One of the vital matters related to national defense in which the Truman administration in general and the State Department in particular have been delinquent is the domestic production of strategic metals.

The strategic metals are those which are essential to modern industry and indispensable to modern warfare.

Most of them are in short supply in the United States, and we have always depended on imports to enable our peacetime industries to function and, of course, to support our war industries when that has been necessary.

But in most cases they are not, as has been mistakenly supposed, unavailable in the United States.

In the case of tungsten, without which steel cannot be made, there are substantial known sources and vast potential sources in this country.

But none of our domestic tungsten mines are operating today and no effort is being made to develop new ones.

The reason for this is that the national tariff policies, for which the Truman administration and the State Department are responsible, have made the import duties on foreign tungsten so low that American production cannot be conducted profitably in competition, and has therefore been abandoned.

The same thing is true of many other metals, most of which could be supplied in sufficient quantity by domestic sources for our own needs in either peace or war, but which come mainly from foreign countries because of the elimination of protective tariff barriers.

Senator MALONE, of Nevada, has remarked in this connection:

"Copper, tungsten, mercury, lead, zinc, aluminum, molybdenum, and vanadium all are vitally necessary, yet the State Department is n the way to put the American production out of business by fixing the import duties so low it is impossible to compete with foreign costs."

Already, as Senator MALONE asserts:

"There is not an independent copper mine in operation in the United States today.

"Copper is a vital war material.

"The tungsten mines are closed.

"Tungsten just happens to be something without which you can't make a pound of high-speed steel."

Ironically, with our own strategic metals sources undeveloped and our main reliance placed upon foreign suppliers, there is an imminent and ominous prospect that the Asiatic war will cut the life-line upon which we have so foolishly come to depend.

Then, of course, as Senator MALONE bitterly comments, the American Government will spare neither cost nor effort in bringing American mines and processing industries back to life.

But that will only be at the grave risk of being too late, and in any event there will be a tragic loss of vital months and years.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY SERVICE LEGISLATION MURDERING UNTRAINED BOYS

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I desire to mention another preparedness item. About 18 months ago I joined with another Senator in introducing a bill for universal military training, February 1949. The administration opposed the bill, so no hearings have ever been held on it. Yesterday we rushed in to introduce another universal military training bill. Why? Because, just as we said would be the case, in an emergency untrained boys are sent into Korea and we are murdering those boys, Mr. President, because many of them are untrained. I do not like it. No one else likes it, but it is too late to train them now.

AMERICAN LEGION ALWAYS FOR THE LEGISLATION

The American Legion is for this bill, I understand. I did not intend to digress for the purpose of discussing the bill, but for 25 years the American Legion and other veterans' organizations have tried to secure the passage of a bill of this kind, under which we would have trained soldiers to be used in an emergency, instead of using green boys. They go to the front. They are brave, and they try to do their job, but are unable to do an adequate job because of lack of training. They are in danger 10 times more than they would be had they been properly trained. In other words, trained soldiers have a better chance of survival.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MALONE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am glad the Senator mentioned the American Legion, with which many of us have been associated, which has been supporting legislation of this kind. I am happy to say that I voted in favor of universal military training, not only in the Armed Services Committee, but on this floor.

Mr. MALONE. I am glad the Senator from South Carolina has seen fit to bring up this matter. He has had experience. He has been in the Armed Forces. He knows what happens to a green soldier, and he knows that a trained soldier has a much better chance of survival.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that I have always supported universal military training, and always shall.

Mr. MALONE. I join with the Senator now.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is my judgment, however, that it is now a little late.

Mr. MALONE. It is late so far as the Korean War is concerned, but from all indications the boys will be sent into other "police actions."

Mr. MAYBANK. We may have, later on.

SEVENTY-FIVE PERCENT BRASS FABRICATION CONTROLLED BY COPPER COMPANIES

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I should like to mention one thing more in connection with the matter of preparedness, which is along the line of the closing of mines by the State Department and by other departments of the Government. Today in the New York Journal of Commerce a brass fabricator "denounces the duty on copper," it says. "Cost must be passed on," Revere chief says. I want to say that the Revere Copper & Brass Co. is controlled by another large company, the American Smelting & Refining Co. We have three large copper companies in the United States which control all the large copper pits. Two of those companies control the working pits in Chile. The three companies own or control 75 to 80 percent of the brass-fabricated production in this country. They want free trade in copper and a tariff on their brass products. Let us see how it works.

STATE DEPARTMENT'S FREE TRADE CLOSED COPPER MINES

Free trade on copper closed every independent copper mine in the United States of America, with the exception of certain small mines in Michigan, which had to lower wages and write off a large amount of the investment in order to keep going. The same principle applies to every industry.

FREE TRADE CLOSED INDEPENDENT COPPER MINES

Mr. President, I should like to say further that all we did when we wrote off the copper tariff—and now great effort is being made to extend free trade on that strategic metal—was to put ourselves into such a position that one snorkel submarine could destroy both the copper deposits in Chile within 48 hours and leave us on our own resources with the independent copper mines closed.

FREE TRADE KILLS VENTURE CAPITAL

So long as we have free trade no venture capital is going into any business, because as soon as the emergency is over the capital is destroyed. So venture capital will not go into business. The only possible way to get capital into business then is through the Government—and everyone knows how inefficient that is, besides destroying our economic structure. We have the Spence bill hanging over our heads like a sword. All we have to do is to complete taking venture capital out of the business and then pass the Spence bill and take the money out of the United States Treasury.

TARIFF ON COPPER—NATIONAL SECURITY MEASURE

The tariff on copper is simply a national security measure and assumes new copper deposits will be found. We must have prospects to have small mines, and we must have small mines to develop large mines.

MUST KNOW OBJECTIVES

Mr. President, it seems to me that before we undertake a regulation of this kind or place this kind of extensive control in the hands of the President of the United States, we should know what the objectives are of this President of the United States. No one has ever said that southern Korea is important to our ultimate safety. I have been talking about this since March 1948. When we first had the great Marshall plan on the floor of the Senate, the junior Senator from Nevada said:

WHAT IS IMPORTANT TO US

Let us separate the objectives and see what they really are. What interests in the world are we going to protect? Are we going to stamp out every fire in the world? Every time a group of Chinese moves down from the Mongolian state into China, are we going to send them back? Or are we going to try to protect the areas which are important to our ultimate safety?

NAME OUR OBJECTIVES

The President has never said what we are going to do when we get to the thirty-eighth parallel—if we do. He has never said whether we will keep the northern Koreans out of South Korea or whether we are going to pack up and come home. The President has never said whether we are going to contain Russia beyond the northern boundary of Korea. It may be that the President will change his mind and go right on through. I do not say it is not the right thing to do, but I say we are entitled to know what we are going to do. It is simply a blind to call it a police action and cover up the $5,000,000,000 domestic debt which he had already incurred. We would have had to sell $5,000,000,000 worth of new bonds in addition to refinancing all the existing obligations anyway—we are now trying to forget that under cover of war.

NOT TIME TO PUT AMERICAN PEOPLE IN STRAIT-JACKETS

I submit, Mr. President, that this is not the time to put the Congress and the people of the United States into a strait-jacket. If he has in mind preparing for a world-wide war, it is time to say so. But the time may come for such controls—but this is not the time.

It is the business of the United States Congress to meet the situation as it comes along and not to dodge it and throw it into the hands of a President just because we may be able to blame him if he makes a mistake. We know he will make a mistake; there is little question about that part of it.

But I am not in the Senate to blame anyone. I want to see Congress assume its responsibility. It is not assuming it when it shifts the responsibility in this manner—through a blanket act.

Mr. President, we have been talking about price control. We are placing in the hands of the President legislation which will allow him to be selective. Many persons believe that if we are going to control one thing, we have to control all the rest. Mr. Baruch said, "If you control the price of one thing, you must control everything, right down to labor."

WAGES MAY BE TIED TO PRICE INDEX

Does he mean that we are to freeze wages and prices as they are now? It might be better to take a leaf out of the General Motors Co. book and say that we shall tie wages to a price index.

No one, I think, objects to raising wages if the cost-of-living index goes up. No one, it seems to me, Mr. President, has thought this thing through. I am not saying I know the answer, because I have been through two world wars, being in the Army in the first war, and close to regulatory bodies during the second war in the South Seas and in Alaska, and Mr. President, controls do not work either.

We are willing, apparently, to take a week to discuss it and then throw it in someone's lap and say, "It is your baby. It is out of our hands. Make a mistake, and we will blame you." We know that there is no man alive who knows how to do this job.

What we are doing is throwing this bill into the greenest of hands. Whose are these greenest of hands? They are the bureau officials, persons brought in and appointed to Government agencies.

GREEN MEN HEAD AGENCIES

I do not, at this late date, Mr. President, need to mention the men at the head of these agencies. They probably did the best they could during World War II with no knowledge at all. Most of them not knowing even one business, they could not know more than one business.

NOT THE TIME FOR CONGRESS TO SHIFT ITS RESPONSIBILITY

In closing, Mr. President, I want to submit that this is not the time for Congress to shift its responsibility and place it entirely in the hands of the executive, simply go home, or, if we do not adjourn, be away on call. But whether we recess and go home or not, we should keep that responsibility and study the situation, and when the President thinks it is time to act, then let him call Congress back into session.

1934 TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. President, I want to review briefly one thing that Congress did in 1934, which is a case in point. Congress will never live that one down. It can take it back, and probably it will. The Senate transferred its constitutional responsibility to regulate foreign trade to the executive branch. That was done through the 1934 Trade Agreements Act. The Congress of the United States is charged with that responsibility by the Constitution, and yet today Congress has no more to do with it than does a man plowing corn with a walking cultivator in Kansas. Congress shifted its responsibility, went home, and has never taken it back and as a result venture capital is being frozen out of the country's economic structure.

ERROR IN JUDGMENT

The junior Senator from Nevada many times on the floor has outlined what happened, and he will not review it today. But the fact is that we do not have an inadequate stockpile of strategic and critical minerals and materials, and the people who can produce those things were out of business due to that error of judgment on the part of Congress.

That includes the textile people, the watchmakers, the crockery people, the lumber people, and others. Why? Because the Congress of the United States was sold a bill of goods with reference to foreign trade. So Congress passed a bill, written all on one page, and transferred to the executive branch, which means the State Department, the only real responsibility that ever rested in the United States Congress, so far as the regulation of the national economy is concerned.

REGULATING NATIONAL ECONOMY THROUGH THE REGULATION OF IMPORTS

What does regulation of foreign trade do? It is the regulation of the national economy; that is what it is. It is the regulation of the national economy through the regulation of imports. We placed that power in the hands of an industrially inexperienced State Department whose thoughts do not connect the standard of living in this country with the standard of living in competitive nations, a department which says that destroying an industry in this country is no reason for not lowering tariffs and import fees.

THE ECONOMIC ONE WORLD

They are headed for an economic one world. That is their plan. While we hope that the police action in Korea will be temporary, we know that probably it will not be because of past experience. Because of the possibility of the police action reoccurring and because of the possibility of a major war, we are probably in for 10 or 15 years or more of such preparations. We shall never get back that regulatory authority from the President of the United States and from an executive department that is mad for power once it is transferred as in this legislation.

WHY DISCARD A FREE ECONOMY AT THE FIRST SIGN OF TROUBLE?

So, Mr. President, let me say that it is a puzzle to me why in a free economy in which we are able to outproduce every nation in the world, in which we are able to support the Socialist nations of Europe and able to support half the nations from the products of a capitalistic free-wheeling system, the minute there is any sign of trouble we must adopt their system to beat them.

Mr. President, this Congress is like a bird dog, which every time the master picks up a gun knows he is going out on a hunt. The minute trouble starts we must have controls fastened on us. We connect the two. I say in closing that I believe this Congress will rue the day if we shift this blanket authority to the Executive.

EXECUTIVE CHARGED WITH FOREIGN POLICY

The Executive is charged with the fixing of our foreign policy. He does not fix it. The Senate of the United States cannot fix foreign policy. All it can do is talk. We have shifted the only real authority we ever had, that of regulating foreign trade and therefore regulating the internal economy of our country, and we gave that authority to the President in one single act—the 1934 Trade Agreements Act—and we have extended it every 3 years; we simply follow like a bunch of sheep.

WILL MOVE TO RETURN TO COMMITTEE

On Monday I shall offer a motion to return the bill to committee, to have the committee study it further, with the small hope that we shall have some idea of what we are doing if we are finally forced to pass such legislation.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that as in executive session the Senate proceed to consider nominations on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. DONNELL. I have no objection to that procedure.

Mr. WATKINS. Reserving the right to object, what nominations are included?

Mr. MAYBANK. The United Nations, International Claims Commission of the United States, Public Advisory Board, Tax Court of the United States, and Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. DONNELL. There is no objection so far as I know. Some individual Senator may make an objection if he so desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). Will the acting majority leader restate his request?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the Senate proceed to consider the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the point has been suggested to the speaker at the moment as to whether it is proper to enter into such a unanimous-consent agreement without a quorum call. I make the parliamentary inquiry as to whether there should first be a quorum call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it has not been the rule to require a quorum call in such a situation.

Mr. DONNELL. I know of no objection, Mr. President, to the confirmation of any of these nominations. None has been communicated to me, and I shall personally not offer any objection.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understand that there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

UNITED NATIONS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Milton Katz, of Massachusetts, to be the United States Special Representative in Europe, with the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, on the matter of the notification of the President, I object. I do so for the reason which has been mentioned a number of times, namely, that the effect of such notification would be to waive the right of reconsideration. So I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will correct the ruling and state that without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

INTERNATIONAL CLAIMS COMMISSION OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nomination of Josiah Marvel, Jr., of Delaware, and of two other citizens to be members of the International Claims Commission of the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations for the International Claims Commission of the United States be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

PUBLIC ADVISORY BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Orin Lehman, of New York, to be a member of the Public Advisory Board.

NEW YORK, August 17, 1950.

Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MCCORMACK: I am writing to you as the majority leader of the House of Representatives to urge the immediate enactment of a comprehensive law for the control of Communist subversive activities in this country. I am sending identical letters to your colleagues, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., House minority leader; the Honorable SCOTT W. LUCAS, Senate majority leader; and the Honorable KENNETH S. WHERRY, Senate minority whip.

I am writing to you from an intimate knowledge of communism and Communists, a knowledge gained over a period of more than 30 years of unhappy contacts with the Communist movement and many of its leaders, both in the labor movement and in public life.

The immediate need for such legislation cannot be overstressed. While I deny the ill-founded assertion, often made, that there is public hysteria on the question of communism today, there is great danger that the absence of legislation under which the Government can take appropriate steps under law will lead to hysteria.

I strongly urge that such proposed legislation be incorporated in an omnibus bill, sponsored as a bipartisan measure. While Americans are fighting and dying against Communist aggression in Korea there is no time for bickering as to who will get political credit for this legislation. On the battlefield our fighting men are not divided into Republicans, Democrats, Liberals, or Conservatives. Likewise, at home, there should be no such division in or out of Congress on the question of fighting and defeating the Communist controlled fifth column.

A comprehensive bipartisan measure, such as I am proposing, should include the following elements:

1. Presdient Truman's recommendations embodied in his August 8 message to Congress. Standing alone, they are woefully inadequate. But they must be included in any comprehensive program.

2. The inclusion with the exception of section 4 (a) of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, which, among other things would require Communist and Communist-front organizations to register with the Department of Justice and would compel the Communist Party to file with that Department the names and addresses of its members and officers as well as other information, including the sources of its financial support.

Section 4 (a), commonly known as the sedition section, is a troublesome provision. For one thing, there is a great deal of division of opinion in the country over this section. If I read correctly President Truman's August 8 message to Congress, his implied criticism of the Mundt-Ferguson bill was directed mainly toward this section. Obviously, the law will be better received by the country and will be better enforced, if both the President and Congress can unite on it. The Mundt-Ferguson bill is not dependent on section 4 (a) for its effectiveness. Moreover, with the unanimous affirmance by a very able court of the convictions of the top 11 Communists in a brilliantly written opinion by Chief Judge Learned Hand, in which the court sustained the constitutionality of the Smith Act, there is no longer real need for section 4 (a).

3. The inclusion of a new section, making it unlawful for Communist candidates and the Communist Party to be on the ballot. In effect such section should provide that no person or organization which advocates or teaches the overthrow of the United States Government, or any State or local government, by force or violence, should be allowed to appear on a ballot electing Federal officers. The language, disqualifying those to be on the ballot, should be modeled after section 3 of the Smith Act.

I recognize that proposal "3" has practical limitations, for the Communist Party, as such, functions today only in a few States; in many States it carries on its work through other political organizations, such as the Progressive Party, and in New York, the American Labor Party. Everyone who has his eyes open to communism and Communists knows that they traffic in deceit and falsehood. Their political organizations are a more transparent disguise for their Kremlin-directed fifth-column activities. Without the provisions of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, this section alone would be wholly ineffectual to deal with the problem. But by adding this provision to those of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, the legislative program would squarely met the evil aimed at. Many people have often claimed, and Communists and their apologists have always capitalized on that claim, that there is an inconsistency between, say, the prosecution of the top 11 Communist leaders, or the exclusion of Communists from Government service, or the proposed registration of Communists, and the fact that the Communist Party is a legal political party, and Communists are allowed to appear on the ballot. In enacting this section, not only will a real need be met, but the last line of sophistry, used by Communist defenders, will, once and for all, be disposed of.

In proposing this omnibus law, I want to emphasize that there is not a vestige of truth in the claim that the provisions of the Mundt-Ferguson bill are antilabor. This is a false issue from beginning to end. Nor, in my opinion, would the inclusion of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, as I urged above, violate civil liberties.

The reason for immediate action is that the Communists have turned their cold war against us into an actual war. This Korean war is not one of nation against nation. It is but a single and tragic manifestation of the general war that Communists, throughout the world, including those in our own country, are waging against us as a Nation, as a people, and as a civilization. Our enemy, therefore, is communism and Communists wherever they may be, in whatever nation they are born, including our own. Russia, of course, is the motherland of all Communists. To her they owe their allegiance and from her they take their orders and directions. But that is not because it is Russia, but because it is the center of Communist power. The war against us is on a global scale. Our defenses and our strategy to meet this enemy must also be on a global scale. The fight against communism is not divisible; we cannot call upon our sons to die, resisting Communist aggression in Korea, and fail to combat Communist fifth-column activities at home.

Another fact to be recognized is that the Communists wage war against American civilization not only as a part of their program of world revolution, but also as part of a program of Russian imperialism. All the activities of Communists here and elsewhere are but tactical steps in their fight for world power. Communists plan for chaos and confusion. They plan for the breakdown and downfall of non-Communist governments everywhere. To that end the Communist movement fosters civil strife, industrial unrest, espionage, sabotage, and other similar activities.

We are often told that our historic liberties stand in the way of Congress in its efforts to destroy or even control effectively the Communist conspiracy aimed at subverting our democratic institutions and our Bill of Rights and establishing in their place a system of human slavery, ruled by terror, lawlessness, and gangsterism. We must reject this philosophy as false history, unsound constitutional law and a vapid abandonment of basic human freedoms.

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS WALDMAN.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950—LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the President of the United States to the Vice President, and asks the clerk to read it for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 18, 1950.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
The Vice President of the United States.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I have been following with keen interest the progress of the defense-production bill which passed the House last week and is now being debated in the Senate. As matters now stand, I am much concerned about the outcome.

Two things seem to be happening. First, the powers for which I asked on July 19, in order to meet the immediate situation, are being whittled down in certain important respects. Second, it appears that the price and wage controls which the Congress proposes to add, may be so circumscribed by a host of detailed limitations and provisos as to confuse and hamper administration should it become necessary to invoke them.

It would be tragic if the Congress were to reject controls we need right now, while voting stand-by measures which could neither do the current job, nor be applied successfully to the contingencies which may arise.

Our chief problem now is to increase defense production, in an economy already running close to capacity, without bringing on inflation. Our aim should be to check inflation at its source. The production aids and credit controls which I have recommended to the Congress are vital for this purpose.

But these powers may not be granted in full. Control of commodity speculation, for example, has now been dropped from both Senate and House bills. Control over credit on existing housing has also been eliminated. Amendments now pending in the Senate would weaken the production features of the legislation. Actions of this sort tend to weaken the effectiveness of the whole program and bring us closer to the day when we might have to clamp down general price and wage controls.

If that were to happen we could ill afford to have an unworkable law on the books. Yet that is just what threatens to occur. In the course of debate on the bill, the Senate has been flooded with amendments to the price-wage provisions reported by the Banking and Currency Committee. These provisions were generally sound and workable, providing a flexible framework for whatever action might be required under future conditions. Unfortunately, some of the amendments offered from the floor are intended to assure some special treatment or privilege for a particular industry or commodity. Paradoxically, many of these provisos are carbon copies of amendments added to the last price-control law in 1945 and 1946, in order to relax controls, as we neared the time of their final removal.

I am keenly aware of the difficulties which have confronted the Congress in attempting to speed action on this complex legislation. I know of the hard work and careful thought which the Banking and Currency Committee has put into preparation of the bill now before the Senate. I would not wish for a moment to detract from the caliber of the over-all result. It would undoubtedly be useful to have stand-by powers which were broad enough and flexible enough to work in any situation which might arise. But if many of these amendments are added to the Senate bill, its price-wage provisions will fail completely to meet that description. The enactment of inflexible, patchwork price controls would be a dangerous deception.

Therefore, it is my earnest hope that the Senate will reject the numerous special-purpose amendments proposed for the price control provisions of the bill. I would also urge strongly that the Senate approve the full range of powers recommended on July 19.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will lie on the table.

DEVELOPMENT OF RIVER RESOURCES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before I discuss the road bill, I wish to make a few brief remarks on another problem, namely, that of working out in the Pacific Northwest a sound, coordinated program between and among the various agencies of government, Federal and State, in connection with the development of our river resources.

I happen to hold to the view that it is very important that there be worked out in the very near future a coordinated program for the administration of the various projects which are being built and will be built by the use of Federal funds in connection with the development of power, irrigation, and reclamation projects.

However, I have always held to the point of view that these developments should take place within the concept of the free-enterprise system. I have always held to the point of view that the development of electric power in the Pacific Northwest should take place on the basis of a satisfactory working arrangement with the private utilities, leaving to the people in the respective communities and areas and regions the determinative power of deciding whether or not they are to be served by private utilities or by public-utility districts.

We have made great progress in the Pacific Northwest since the consummation of the so-called Tacoma agreement, which was an agreement entered into by representatives of Federal agencies and the private utilities. In my opinion it has formed the basis for a working agreement between the Federal Government and the private utilities, although much still needs to be done in perfecting the program. It, of course, all has a direct relationship to the whole problem of the type of organization which should be set up to administer these projects, whether it should be done by way of a CVA, or whether it should be done by way of a program which carries out the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, strengthened by a governmental corporation established under an interstate compact in accordance with the purposes of the interstate compact section of the Constitution of the United States.

It has always been the position of the junior Senator from Oregon that the final decision as to the type of service the consumer is to receive in the distribution of power should be determined by the consumers in the area concerned. It has also been his position that the best way to coordinate the administration of agencies in charge of such activities is by the adoption of the major recommendations of the Hoover Commission, plus the creation of a governmental corporation under an interstate compact, keeping in mind that any administrative set-up should guarantee to the people of the States in the Pacific Northwest a voting voice in determining their representations on the governing board, or the board of directors, and thereby an active voice in determining the administrative policies of such an administrative organization.

I cannot strees that point too strongly, Mr. President, because I believe it goes to the heart of my objections to a CVA, at least it goes to the heart of the pending CVA bill, because I can never agree to give to three Presidential appointees the arbitrary, discretionary power which that bill vests in them over the economic life of the Pacific Northwest.

There is always a danger, when such a controversy arises as that which is being developed as a result of the CVA proposal, that men will overlook the fact that after all, some coordination of these developments is needed in the interest of efficiency, in the interest of economy, and in the interest of developing to the maximum extent possible the resources of the great rivers concerned.

However, throughout the controversy, as it has been waged to date, I have noted a great many cool heads that have not taken a blind partisan attitude in regard to the subject, on either side of the issue, men within the private utilities, as well as men within Federal Government agencies who are strong for CVA, as well as men not connected either with the private utilities or with the Government agencies, who recognize that there is a common denominator in this discussion, that there is a common major premise upon which agreement should be reached, and that is the need for a coordination of the various State and Federal agencies which have a jurisdictional interest in the development of these rivers. Among such men is Thomas W. Delzell, chairman of the board of the Portland General Electric Co., a man with whom I have had several conversations concerning his views as to the type of program toward which he thinks we ought to work. Although I do not agree with Mr. Delzell on some details, I want to say on the floor of the Senate today that I have always recognized in him a man who is trying to make a fair approach to this whole prob-

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, another letter which I received from Mr. Baldock, State highway engineer of Oregon, under date of March 15, 1950, including a statement he made under date of March 14 on the whole question of highway development. The heading of the statement is as follows:

Statement of R. H. Baldock, State highway engineer of Oregon, member, executive committee of the American Association of State Highway Officials, before the Committee on Public Works, House of Representatives, concerning a Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1950, March 14, 1950.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS,
Washington, D. C., March 15, 1950.

The Honorable WAYNE MORSE,
Member of Congress,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MORSE: This is the year for the passage of additional Federal road authorizations. Pursuant to recent conversation with your secretary, I am attaching hereto the statement I made before the Committee on Public Works of the House of Representatives concerning H. R. 7398, otherwise known as the House 1950 road bill. I am likewise attaching a copy of this bill.

Briefly, the 1944 legislation provided for the building of Federal-aid highways in accordance with the following schedule:

Primary Federal-aid highways	$225,000,000
Secondary Federal-aid highways	150,000,000
Urban Federal-aid highways	125,000,000
Total	500,000,000

In 1948 these amounts were reduced as follows:

Primary Federal-aid highways	$202,500,000
Secondary Federal-aid highways	135,000,000
Urban Federal-aid highways	112,500,000
Total	450,000,000

H. R. 7398 proposes the same amounts for the primary, secondary, and urban systems as provided in 1944, with the addition of $70,000,000 earmarked for the interstate system, or a total of $570,000,000. The American Association of State Highway Officials has recommended to the Congress the adoption of legislation authorizing the following amounts:

Interstate system	$210,000,000
Primary system	270,000,000
Secondary system	180,000,000
Urban system	150,000,000
Total	810,000,000

Supporting data for the need of replacing the depreciated facilities of the highway plant are given in the statement which I made before the House committee.

There is probably no matter before the Congress that more affects the well being of the American economy than this road bill.

Last year there was introduced in the Senate several bills providing for a tertiary, or third-order, Federal system of roads local in character. I have taken occasion in this presentation to point out the fallacy of such action. Although provision for a tertiary system of roads is not made in the House bill, it is probable that it may appear in the Senate version and will possibly necessitate conference between the Senate and the House before the final enactment of road legislation this session.

I would appreciate your support in the enactment of legislation in the Senate comparable to the bill now in the House, with additional authorizations, if possible, to bring the total funds up to those recommended by the American Association of State Highway Officials.

I am sorry that you were out of Washington while I was here, but I will look forward to seeing you when the hearings on the road bill come up before the Senate, if I can possibly return. If you agree with my analysis of the situation, perhaps you might try to persuade Senator CHAVEZ, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works, to enact Federal legislation in the Senate comparable to the House bill.

Permit me to wish you every success in your continued service as Senator from the great State of Oregon. You have filled that position with ability and distinction.

Sincerely yours,

R. H. BALDOCK,
State Highway Engineer.

STATEMENT OF R. H. BALDOCK, STATE HIGHWAY ENGINEER OF OREGON, MEMBER, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, CONCERNING A FEDERAL AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1950, MARCH 14, 1950

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the American Association of State Highway Officials has submitted to you recomendations on continuing road legislation. Your action on them, together with your authorizations of funds for at least another 2-year period is needed at this time to afford the States a basis on which to continue their planning of needed highway improvement in an orderly manner.

Quoting from the Fortune Magazine of November 1949, "The $35,000,000,000 highway plant generates annual income in excess of $30,000,000,000. It is the best investment that the United States ever made. Today the highway plant needs renewal and enlargement. The bill will run into billions—relatively cheap billions, considering what is at stake. One-seventh of United States business lives off the highway, and all United States business sells to that seventh. Road conditions enter into all business costs through their effect on freight charges, and mobility of labor and customers."

Back in 1943, this association recommended an expenditure of not less than $3,000,000,000 a year for 20 years. Last year the expenditure was about $1,500,000,000, or about one-half the amount needed, yet last year's expenditure was the largest ever made.

Now, there are some 3,300,000 miles of roads and streets in the United States, of which about 600,000 miles are on the Federal-aid system. Of the 600,000 miles, about 38,000 miles, comprising the interstate system or about 1 percent of the total mileage, carry about 20 percent of the rural traffic, and the total mileage of Federal-aid roads, about 18 percent of the total mileage, carry 87 percent of the traffic, leaving only about 13 percent of the traffic carried by the remaining 2,700,000 miles of roads and streets not on the Federal-aid system.

The interstate system of highways which, as I have said, carries approximately 20 percent of all the rural traffic is "the main street of America." It ties together the major cities of the Nation and forms a truly national system of highways; a system which comprises the most important roads which are vital to the Nation's economy both in peacetime and in wartime. On account of the national importance of this system, the Federal-aid matching ratio should, we believe, be changed from a 50–50 basis to a 75–25 basis; the Federal Government assuming a larger share of the cost of this interstate system than it does of the costs of the primary and secondary systems. We further recommend that a substantial amount of Federal funds be earmarked each year for the purpose of building the interstate highway system. We believe that an apportionment of these funds among the States on the basis of population alone and without consideration of area and post-road mileage would be equitable. The primary Federal-aid system, comprising, as it does, the general, all-purpose, principal roads which tie together the cities and the counties is next in importance. The roads in this system have not only demonstrated their importance in peacetime, but have proved themselves to be essential to the wartime economy of this Nation. These primary Federal-aid roads, together with the feeder roads and farm-to-market roads which comprise the secondary Federal-aid system, carry about 87 percent of the Nation's traffic.

Fortune magazine points out the obsolescence of the highway plant. The Bureau of Public Roads has determined that the needs of the interstate system alone amount to no less than $11,000,000,000. The American Association of State Highway Officials has determined the needs of all highways during the next 20 years to be not less than $60,000,000,000. Senator O'MAHONEY, Chairman of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, has announced that the correction of present deficiencies on State highway systems will cost $23,000,000,000.

This report of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, prepared with cooperation of the Bureau of Public Roads and the State highway departments, and entitled "Highways and the Nation's Economy," presents a measure of the work to be done in bringing the Nation's road systems to proper standards of efficiency. It supports the axiom that people pay for good roads whether they get them or not. "The people of the Nation receive the benefits of economical transportation in lowered transportation costs of the goods and services they produce and consume," the report points out, "or they pay the added cost of deficient highways in higher transportation and consumer costs."

The report compares current highway construction with prewar accomplishment and concludes that with the construction dollar now valued at 54 cents, compared with the 1930 dollar, it is necessary to spend nearly twice as much money today to equal the 1930 construction peak expenditure of $1,505,000,000. Dollar value of all highway construction in the United States in 1948, with and without Federal aid, totaled $1,569,000,000.

Annual construction expenditure in 1936, the report shows, amounted to 1.8 mills per gross ton mile of vehicle travel, whereas, the 1948 expenditure was equivalent to only 0.86 of the 1936 mill per gross ton mile. The report also states that 0.6 percent of the total national expenditures for goods and services was spent for street and highway construction in 1948, which was less than half the 1929–36 rate.

In studying the impact of highways on the national economy, the report takes notes of the fact that more than 9,000,000 persons are employed directly or indirectly in highway transportation industries; that many businesses depend solely on patronage of the motorist; that almost all commodities are transported at least partially by motor truck.

"Small savings to individual highway users through road improvements can have a large effect on our economy," the report states. "An average saving of 1 cent a mile due to savings in time and the cost of motor-vehicle operation on the 400,000,000,000 vehicle-miles of travel in 1948 would amount to $4,000,000,000 per year. * * * Operating cost of the average passenger car in the prewar period was reduced approximately 1 cent per mile by traveling on a gravel road as compared to a dirt road, and approximately 1 cent per mile by traveling on a bituminous or concrete paved highway as compared to a gravel road." Economic benefits of highway improvements were cited also in reduction of accidents.

The normal life of a first-class highway is regarded to be from 20 to 30 years. Much of the more important mileage representing the more heavily traveled roads was built in the twenties, and, therefore, much of the road mileage is wearing out all at once. Failure to restore the critical deficiencies with current income has brought about a truly serious problem and has increased maintenance costs to an alarming extent. Maintenance is unavoidable. Unless highway income is increased there soon will be no money for new construction.

It has been proposed to set up a tertiary or third structure of Federal-aid roads under the cry of "taking the farmer out of the mud." As long as the moneys available for highways continue, as at present, far below the amounts needed, it would appear obvious that such funds as are available should be expended where they are most needed and where the expenditure will create the greatest benefits to the people. Expenditures on primary and secondary highways under present conditions yield far greater benefits than do expenditures on roads of lower classification; therefore, whatever additional funds can be made available for roads should be expended on the primary and secondary Federal-aid systems.

An attempt to relieve those benefited by land-service roads of land taxes and to substitute therefor general taxes on all the people, to be matched by road-user taxes, is not economically sound. Such action operates to increase the tendency of the people to lean upon the Federal Government for all manner of things, so that the people will more or less lose sight of the fact that the people must support the Government, not the Government support the people.

The Government's interest in these low-class roads is certainly of questionable propriety. The Government should concern itself with the main trunk highways particularly the interstate system which ties the States together and which has proved to be absolutely necessary in the defense of the Nation, and the Federal Government should not interest itself in these third-order roads which should be the responsibility of the landowner.

The present Federal Highway Act is based upon agreement between the Federal Government and the autonomous States. It has worked out remarkably well in the past 30 years and it should be continued. Additional Federal funds should be earmarked for the building of the interstate system and additional Federal funds should be provided for the restoration of the depreciated primary highway facilities. Failure to provide these funds for this greatly needed work would be a severe blow to the entire economy of the Nation. Failure to carry on the restoration of the depreciated highway facilities has already brought about a grave and serious problem, and the economic expansion of the entire Nation has been retarded. It is certainly no time, when funds are so greatly needed for the roads of major importance, to even talk of Federal expenditures on low-class roads. First things should come first.

H. R. 7398, now under consideration by your committee, embraces the essential principles recommended by our association, but does not provide the authorizations for the needed capital investment in the Nation's highway system and we therefore pray your favorable consideration for an increase in the authorizations to the total amounts recommended by our association, as follows:

1. Interstate system	$210,000,000
2. Primary system	270,000,000
3. Secondary system	180,000,000
4. Urban system	150,000,000
Total	810,000,000

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I close with a very brief summary.

My argument covers two main points. First, I differ with the committee on the question of policy as to the use of Federal-aid funds for the construction of country roads.

Second, setting aside for the sake of argument our difference over policy, I take the position that the language of the bill on page 13, to which I have taken exception, results in the Senate of the United States exercising a discretion over the expenditure of funds in States when the State highway officials of the States are much better qualified to make proper expenditures of the funds because of their better knowledge and understanding of State highway problems. I think, Mr. President, we should not set ourselves up as the determiners of how State highway officials should spend highway funds.

A third point of my argument is that I think the committee, between now and next Tuesday, in view of the very sound argument which the State highway commissioner has communicated to me and which I have tried to make available to the Members of the Senate, should try to work out some language in the bill which will permit the States that want to use the $150,000,000 provided in the bill for country roads, to do so if they care to. But we should not place a requirement upon State highway commissioners to spend the money in that way if, in the opinion of those highway commissioners, the economy of the State would be best served by using the money on primary and secondary roads.

That is the burden of my argument, Mr. President. I shall wait with interest for an answer to it, but up to this time all I have heard with respect to it is that this particular section is needed to benefit the farmers of America. I am willing to leave it to the State highway authorities of the respective States to determine for themselves what is needed to benefit the farmers of their respective States with regard to highway construction. I think we are making a great mistake to pass a bill which contains language providing that highway commissioners, who have urged many Senators to support the Lodge-Saltonstall amendment, are practically compelled to spend money on country roads when the money could best be spent on primary and secondary roads. In other words, Mr. President, I say, once again, that the junior Senator from Oregon is protesting against the exercise of arbitrary discretion on the part of governmental officials, even when, in this instance, he believes those Government officials happen to be Members of the United States Senate.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to address a few questions to the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee in reference to the Defense Production Act of 1950, and, in particular, with reference to section 302 of that bill, in order to receive from the chairman of the committee his interpretation of the language as provided in that section.

The first question I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee is as follows:

Is it the opinion of the members of the committee, namely, the Banking and Currency Committee, that the Defense Production Act loan provision as outlined in section 302 would provide Federal loans for the purpose of the development of the iron-ore resources, such as taconite, within the United States?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to answer my friend from Minnesota by saying that we considered his bill, and it was the contention of the majority of the committee that it would do so. In considering the bill we thought that the authorization of $2,000,000 would give the President the powers to which the distinguished Senator from Minnesota has referred.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have introduced a bill, S. 3949, which pertains specifically to loans for the development of taconite and other iron ore resources for low-grade iron ore production, and I have discussed it with the chairman of the committee as well as other members of the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. The committee considered the bill and they thought that if we acted on it, other bills would be introduced pertaining to other types of metals. It was the judgment of the majority—and I am perfectly frank to admit that some members opposed it—that the provision in the pending bill should be adopted.

Mr. HUMPHREY. As I understand section 302, it would make it possible to make loans for this purpose under the broad language of the section.

Mr. MAYBANK. That was my understanding, and it was the understanding of the majority of the members of the committee. Some of the members were opposed to it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the next question I should like to ask of the able chairman is: In the opinion of the members of the committee should loans for the development of taconite be less reasonable and liberal than the loan policy of the Export-Import Bank, or should they be just as liberal?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, that is a rather hard question to answer. However, I think to our own people in Minnesota and in the Great Lakes-Lake Superior area, and in the area from which the Senator comes, loans should be more liberal.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The reason I asked the question, Mr. President, is because in checking through the Export-Import Bank loan provisions I found language such as this——

Mr. MAYBANK. I am not speaking for the committee, but I listened to the taconite hearings and I saw the professor from the University of Minnesota, and I believe the American Government could be more liberal in construing loans under that section than Export-Import Bank loans that have been made.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am grateful to the chairman for his answer. I wish to point out a specific example.

Loan No. 310. The purpose of the loan was made to provide iron ore for the British war effort and to develop Brazilian mining industry. The terms: Payable in 22 years. Interest and principal are payable solely from the operation of the mine and financed by the loan.

All the Senator from Minnesota wanted to do was to get into the RECORD a comparison between what we do under the Export-Import Bank loan provisions, and what we can or should do under our domestic program. It is the purpose of the junior Senator from Minnestota to encourage upon the part of the Government a reasonable loan policy to develop the taconite, which is one of the great strategic metal resources of our country in case of a national emergency such as that in which we are now involved.

My third and final question to my friend, the chairman of the committee is: Does the Defense Production Act of 1950 provide sufficient authority for an administrative agency to establish a loan policy which would accomplish the aims of S. 3949 in the development of taconite and other essential minerals?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I can only say that if the bill that comes from the Committee on Banking and Currency is approved as it was written by the committee, and if the item of $2,000,000,000 is retained in the bill, the President would have the right to establish such a policy, or the President would have the right to appoint an agency to do it. Of course we cannot tell what will be done by the Senate. We are hopeful the provision will be left in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. As it is now written the authority would be contained in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is my understanding.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In order to add further to the legislative history, and not take the time of the Senate, I should like to ask unanimous consent to have a copy of a letter written to the able chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency on July 26, incorporated in the RECORD, at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following is a letter written to the Honorable BURNET MAYBANK, chairman, Senate Banking and Currency Committee by Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat of Minnesota, regarding S. 3936, the Defense Production Act of 1950:

"I am writing you this letter in connection with S. 3936, the Defense Production Act of 1950, now being considered by your committee. The bill provides for the allocation of scarce commodities under a priority system as well as other policies related to the problem of national defense which we face. I write you in connection with the necessity to expand iron and steel supplies and the relationship that problem has to a bill I recently introduced, S. 3949, to provide for the development of taconite and other strategic minerals. This is a companion bill to a proposal introduced by Representative BLATNIK in the House of Representatives on May 15.

"Title III of S. 3936, the bill you are now considering, authorizes the President to purchase for the use of our Government for storage or for resale any minerals, metals, or raw materials needed to increase the supply of essential supplies. The most important strategic material in the United States is iron ore. Iron and steel are basic to all heavy industry, whether these industries are engaged in the war effort or in peace production. It is fully understandable, therefore, that the need for guaranteeing an adequate supply of iron and steel is one of top priority.

"The Mesabi iron range in the State of Minnesota produces approximately three-fourths of all iron ore in America. I have had many opportunities to become familiar with the iron and steel industries. I know from personal experience and investigation that we face a most serious problem in iron and steel.

"At the present time we in the United States use our iron ore at the rate of 80,000,000 tons per year. In 1948 we in the United States used 84,700,000 tons of iron ore. There is no doubt that in times of national emergency we need at least 100,000,000 tons per year.

"The Great Lakes area has furnished more than 85 percent of our iron-ore needs durnig the past 50 years. The Mesbia iron range has provided about 75 percent of all iron ore. In 1948, to use that year again as an example, the Mesabi Range provided 62,000,000 tons of iron ore out of a total ore production of 84,700,000 tons.

"Proof seems incontrovertible that the high-grade iron ore of the Mesabi Range is fast being depleted. I am informed that according to official estimates made in 1946, there was only 1,200,000,000 tons of iron ore left in the Great Lakes area, and of that only 900,000,000 tons of iron ore was located in the Mesabi Range. In this connection, the United States Bureau of Mines reports that the Great Lakes iron-ore reserves will be exhausted by 1960 if our ore is used at the present rate of consumption. To the extent that the United States becomes involved in further refense preparations and requires an all-out production effort, this rate may well be accelerated.

"The importance of taconite, therefore, is quite apparent. The northern part of our State of Minnesota possesses a dense siliceous rock known as taconite. The Bureau of Mines estimates that there is enough taconite in northern Minnesota to supply our iron needs for a thousand years if it can be developed commercially.

"With this problem in mind, I introduced on July 20th my bill, S. 3949, which would provide 30-year loans to private firms to develop taconite and other strategic materials. I believe, in view of the recent international crisis, the provisions of my bill might appropriately be included as an amendment to the National Defense Act of 1950, S. 3936, which you are now considering, and it is with this in mind that I write this letter.

"Taconite ore was first made into a commercial product in 1922. It is a hard rock composed of 20 to 30 percent pure iron. To process this rock it is necessary, first, to blast the ore loose, crush it into a fine powder, wash out the silicate and then pelletize it. These pellets contain about 60 percent pure iron, and they can then be utilized by blast furnaces in the same way as regular iron ore is processed.

"Taconite production differs from regular open-pit mining in that it is an industrial process rather than a strictly mining process. It is a more complicated process and involves six times as much manpower and more machinery than ordinary open-pit mining. It also requires heavier capital expenditures as an investment. Thus, whereas open-pit mining would require a capital expenditure of between $3 to $5 per ton of output, the production of taconite requires a capital investment of $20 per ton.

"For these reasons, taconite has never been able to compete with high-grade ore. To promote its production requires that the Federal Government provide liberal long-term loans to mining companies. Experiments undertaken at the University of Minnesota and elsewhere indicate that refinements and changes have taken place and can take place in the processing of taconite to further reduce its production costs to a price which would approximate that of other types of iron ore.

"An amendment to your bill, S. 3936, it seems to me, would be quite appropriate and quite urgent. Without such an amendment, adopting the language of my bill, S. 3949, the bill you are now considering, S. 3936, would, in my opinion, not fulfill the need we face today. S. 3936 does not specifically define what minerals are considered strategic. Furthermore, in view of the long-term nature of taconite development, loans of 30 years maturity are required. S. 3936 does not spell out the terms of the loans. Furthermore, for the full utilization of taconite, new transportation facilities are required. Loans should be authorized, therefore, for the construction of new transportation facilities required in the production of taconite.

"It seems very clear to me that the welfare of our Nation calls for the development of added mineral resources and that taconite production must be an essential part of such a program. It is for this reason I urge your committee to consider the amendment to your bill which I suggest, namely, which would define taconite as a strategic mineral and authorize loans of 30 years' maturity for taconite development. This would provide new sources for iron and steel. I urge your favorable consideration of this proposal."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should also like to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter which W. Stuart Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. It pertains to S. 3949 and it refers to the Defense Production Act of 1950.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
NATIONAL SECURITY RESOURCES BOARD,
Washington, D. C., August 7, 1950.

The Honorable BURNET R. MAYBANK,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in reply to the request of your committee for the opinion of the Resources Board on S. 3943 and S. 3949, bills to promote the development, production, and utilization of taconite and other minerals advantageous to the national defense and valuable to the national economy.

It is our belief that the provisions of the proposed Defense Production Act of 1950 (S. 3936) now under consideration by Congress would authorize all of the assistance to private mineral enterprises proposed by these bills and would have the added advantages of authorizing similar assistance for other raw materials and of permitting greater flexibility in operations.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely,

W. STUART SYMINGTON.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks an editorial entitled, "Report Stresses State Need of Taconite Development," published in the St. Paul Pioneer Press on August 7, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT STRESSES STATE NEED OF TACONITE DEVELOPMENT

Although Minnesota has no monopoly on iron ore and its dominance in the field is declining, the State can withstand outside competition if cost of low grade ore production can be kept low.

Five State legislators reached these conclusions in an 82-page report which will be submitted this morning to the legislative research committee at a meeting in the capitol.

The subcommittee on labor, industry, and commerce—headed by Senator Thomas P. Welch, of Buffalo—was ordered specifically by the 1949 legislature to "make a study of iron ore deposits that are or might be competitive with the Minnesota iron ore deposits, including fields in Labrador, Greenland, and South America, and their availability to market."

The report concludes the best estimate is that foreign ores will be used in the future together with beneficiated—concentrated—Minnesota ores of lower grade.

Foreign ores, according to the report, will come mainly from Canada, Labrador, Newfoundland, Latin America, Africa, and Scandinavia.

PROMISING DEPOSITS

The recently discovered Venezuelan deposits are considered in many quarters, the report says, to be the most promising in both quality and quantity and as well as availability to the United States. The legislators point out, however, that wartime hazards complicate ore shipments overseas.

As far as the Labrador and eastern Canada deposits are concerned, availability of those ores during wartime will depend to a great extent on whether the proposed St. Lawrence seaway is in use, the legislators predict.

The report emphasizes that Minnesota iron ore production is beginning to feel the strain of the herculean task of providing most of the ore consumed in this country for more than half a century—including two world wars. It has run as high as 80 percent some years.

The report forsees the end of high-grade Minnesota ores in the not-very-distant future, some estimate by 1970, but does not predict the end of the industry if low-grade ores can be utilized.

"There are too many variable factors," the report explains, "to permit accurate predictions of how long the high-grade ores will last in Minnesota. The exact date of exhaustion is not very important—the significant fact is that Minnesota's iron-mining industry will have to make major adjustments in order to continue to compete with ores from outside the State."

WON'T RELOCATE

The report indicates that steelmakers won't make drastic changes in location of blast furnaces because it is cheaper to ship ore to the steel centers than it is to ship other necessary ingredients—primarily coke and limestone. Those ingredients are plentiful in the major steel-center areas, located mostly on the Great Lakes.

"As the reserves of high-grade ores in Minnesota decline," the subcommittee says, "it is expected that more and more attention will be devoted to developing low-grade ores including taconite.

"More beneficiated iron ore is shipped from Minnesota than from any other State, but beneficiation is on the increase in other States as well as in Minnesota."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask that a letter from the St. Paul Association of Commerce, signed by Mr. M. W. Thompson, dated August 7, 1950, be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks. The letter pertains to the entire problem as outlined in the Defense Production Act. The letter presents several recommendations which should be of interest in the consideration of this legislation insofar as it pertains to controls, allocations, and priorities. I think it is a very constructive letter.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PAUL ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE,
St. Paul, Minn., August 7, 1950.

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Senator from Minnesota,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We note that price control legislation is under very active consideration at the presnt time, and action may be taken within the next few days. We, therefore, submit the following views of St. Paul retailers to you in connection with these probable price control laws. We respectfully ask your consideration regarding the same.

1. No action should be taken on price control and wage control until public hearings have been held. The subject is too important to be passed without the public being given a chance to be heard.

2. If price and wage controls are found to be necessary, then the following should be included in any legislation:

A. Price-control legislation shall recognize the necessity of controlling simultaneously all the elements of cost entering into the seller's price, including raw materials, agricultural commodities, wages, and transportation costs.

B. The method of controlling prices shall conform to the historical practice and experience of the individual seller.

C. Prior to the issuance of any price-control regulations, the controlling governmental agency shall be required to consult fully and effectively with representatives of the industry affected; the respective industry or trade association representing it shall have the right to select representatives of their own choosing for this purpose.

D. Such legislation shall provide for the setting up of a joint congressional committee to act in effect as a legislative court of last resort.

E. In the case of any roll-back in prices, due consideration shall be given to the time lag between manufacturing, wholesaling and retail prices, and equitable machinery set up to correct abnormalities and hardships resulting from any such roll-back.

Yours very sincerely,
M. W. THOMPSON,
Retail Secretary.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a statement which I had prepared and which I had at one time hoped I would be able to have the time to deliver on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that we would have been glad to have him appear before the committee on his bill. The Senator was most diligent in his duties. He came and testified. We would have considered his bill except that we thought the legislation he sought was included in the bill under section 302 and under the $2,000,000,000 loan provision.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to know that the bill includes the provision. I discussed it with other members of the committee, but particularly with the chairman, and I am satisfied that section 302 does everything that I was looking forward to having done by the particular bill which I had introduced.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a statement which I issued in the form of a release. It pertains to the essential sections which I believe should constitute a defense production program, particularly as it pertains to the controls which I believe are needed in this stage of the national emergency. Most of the suggested provisions have already been incorporated in the bill as presented by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I believe it is vitally important that the bill be passed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY ON CIVILIAN CONTROLS

There is one thing unmistakably clear. We must prevent price gouging, profiteering, and inflation. To do this action is needed. I support the following program and have recommended this program to the Congress.

1. The President must be given the authority to impose price ceilings immedately on basic commodities at the wholesale and producer levels. These prices must be rolled back to their level between June 15 and June 25.

2. The President must be given the authority to impose priorities, production controls, and the allocation of resources in accordance with our objective to maintain full production.

3. The President must be given the authority to impose consumer retail price ceilings to a level between June 15 and June 25.

4. The President must be given the authority to impose wage controls necessary to maintain the consumer price level.

5. The President must be given the authority to impose rationing of those consumer commodities in which shortages may take place. It may be that such rationing will not be necessary at all, but we should be prepared lest inequities take place at the expense of the American consumer.

6. The President must be given the authority to allocate manpower when necessary.

7. The Congress must act to strengthen our existing rent-control laws, extend them, and allow for recontrol whenever housing shortages exist.

8. The Congress must immediately enact a program of tax increases on individuals and corporations. Basic to such a program must be an immediate enactment of an excess profits tax to be effective as of June 25.

There is no room for profiteering in a democracy while American soldiers sacrifice themselves on the battlefield and their families sacrifice on the domestic front.

All of these proposals are necessary if we are to save ourselves from a breakdown of our economy. The cause of human freedom is at stake. The world is engaged in a great conflict of the two philosophies of life: The one—the democratic philosophy—is based upon respect for the individual and his rights as a freeman; the other philosophy—the Communist-totalitarian doctrine—is based upon the principle of force and fear where the individual is but a slave and tool of the power-crazed dictators. Sacrifice is never easy, but sacrifice in behalf of freedom is a noble work. I, for one, believe that the American people are prepared to make whatever sacrifices are necessary.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to thank my good friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] for making this time available to me. He had the claim to the floor, and he was most generous and courteous.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the first item I wish to insert in the RECORD is a letter from the Comptroller General, Mr. Warren, dated August 15, 1950, addressed to me. It pertains to section 304 (a).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to insert the letter in the body of the RECORD?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wish to have the letter made a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, August 15, 1950.

Hon. J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR FULBRIGHT: In response to your recent informal request I am pleased to send you this expression of my views on the need, if any, for authority to create new Government corporations, contained in S. 3936 as introduced but stricken from the bill as reported out by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

Section 302 of S. 3936 would authorize the President to provide for loans, including participation therein or guarantee thereof, to private businesses, and section 303 would authorize him to provide for purchases of raw materials for use and resale without regard to limitations of existing law, under certain broad conditions.

Section 304, as introduced, would have authorized the President to create new Government corporations when deemed appropriate by him for carrying out the purposes of sections 302 and 303. The corporations would have had the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; and to determine the character of and necessity for their obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they would be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws, including the Government Corporation Control Act, applicable to Government corporations. They would have been financed by borrowings from the Treasury up to an aggregate of $2,000,000,000, and have succession until June 30, 1952, unless extended by Congress.

Such new corporations thus would not have been subject to accounting and audit procedures applicable to Government agencies generally. The General Accounting Office would have been powerless to prevent or collect back any expenditures which, but for the broad corporate authority, would be illegal. It could only report them to the Congress.

My views on the creation of additional Government corporations are well known. In some cases they may be necessary and valuable means of conducting the public business. But there is entirely too much disposition to start new ones, and to perpetuate old ones which are not actually needed.

Unfortunately, the use of the corporate device has been abused. It has been fastened upon as a ready contrivance to evade the disallowance power whereby the General Accounting Office, as the agent of the Congress, can collect and put back into the Treasury illegal expenditures. The importance of the disallowance power is evident from the more than $660,000,000 recovered by the General Accounting Office just in the last 10 years. Even that vast sum is comparatively small beside the untold amounts saved because of the powerful deterrent effect of the General Accounting Office audits.

Observation and experience have shown that some of the largest of questionable payments have been made by Government corporations. There was no way in the world for the General Accounting Office to recover 1 cent of those payments. The corporate charter deprived the office of its only effective means—the disallowance power—to collect them.

Some of the more significant effects of the corporate form were set forth in my letter of December 5, 1947, to Hon. CHARLES A. EATON, House of Representatives (printed at pp. 776–779 of House Rept. No. 1845, 80th Cong.). A copy of that letter is enclosd. Of course, changes have since been made both in special and general legislation dealing with corporations. But, those changes largely indicate the shaping of congressional policy toward closer supervision and control of corporations and modification, not enlargement, of the often too-broad authority they have over their own spending. It is noteworthy, also, that the more than 100 Government corporations in existence when the Government Corporation Control Act was passed in 1945 have been reduced in number by more than one-third.

It may be said as a general proposition that the corporate form for a Government instrumentality—to the extent it is free of compliance with laws applicable to other Government activities and of normal safeguards set up by the Congress to prevent and correct improper expenditures of public funds—can be justified only by the most compelling reasons or overruling public necessity. No such compelling reasons or overruling necessity have been made out for the creation of additional corporations as originally authorized by S. 3936. Indeed, I am not informed that any have even been strongly urged by proponents of the bill. Apparently the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency shares the view that the authority is not needed, since the authorization to create new corporations was eliminated from the bill when reported out by that committee.

From the foregoing, I am not aware of any reasons why the purposes of S. 3936 could not be accomplished without any new corporations. Therefore, the conclusion appears reasonable that delegation by the Congress of authority to create new corporations to carry out those purposes is not only unnecessary but undesirable at this time.

I hope that this expression of my views will be helpful to you.

Sincerely yours,
LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The question of whether or not a new corporation should be created to carry out the functions of this bill has been one that has been debated in the committee. I therefore requested that this letter from the Comptroller General giving his views be printed in the RECORD. I think Mr. Warren has studied the question at great length and has as much information on the subject as anyone else in the Government. I recommend it highly to the attention of the Senate. I hope that the provision which was intended to prevent the formation of new corporations will be retained in the bill.

I have a copy of a letter addressed by the Comptroller General to the Honorable Charles A. Eaton, when he was chairman of the Select Committee on Foreign Aid of the House of Representatives. The letter is dated December 5, 1947. The letter goes into some detail in explaining the way Government corporations function and the extent of their powers. By way of summary and comment I should like to say that Mr. Warren feels and demonstrates that the agencies of Government can really do anything that corporations can do, but that they are subjected to much better accounting checks on the part of the Comptroller.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, December 5, 1947.

Hon. CHARLES A. EATON,
Chairman, Select Committee on Foreign Aid, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter of November 24, referring to the investigations being carried on by your committee with respect to the organization and administration of foreign aid and recovery programs and your request for such information as is available to the General Accounting Office on the subject of Government corporations with respect to three specific questions, the first of which is as follows:

"(1) The actual significance of the use of the corporate form, from the standpoint of appropriations, expenditures, accounting, purchases, receipts, lawsuits, etc."

Of course, in the short time available it is not possible to furnish a definitive analysis and report, but it is believed the following comments will be found helpful to the committee:

1. Appropriations: It is not possible to generalize with completeness as to the actual significance of the use of the corporate form, from the standpoint of appropriations, for the reason that no consistent policy has been adopted by the Congress in financing the corporations, nor, in fact, is it necessarily true that there should be entire uniformity in this fegard. In general, however, it may be said that if the more usual form of capitalization is employed, the significant difference with respect to appropriations is that the corporation is given a lump sum in the form of capital stock or authority to borrow, with further authority to use and reuse the sum, and particularly to treat it as a revolving fund, thus permitting the reuse of receipts such as repayment of loans, receipts from the sale of goods, and the like, whereas the normal departmental rule is that income of all types (unless specially excepted) must be deposited to the general fund of the Treasury and is not reused unless appropriated by Congress. The corporation's funds need not be reappropriated; the only comparable requirement is that the over-all budget program of each wholly-owned corporation must be submitted to Congress each year.

There are exceptions both ways to this perhaps too broad generality; thus, certain corporations' expenditure-type activities are carried on under regular annual appropriations which revert to the Treasury unless obligated during the year for which the appropriation is made, while in the case of numerous departments and agencies revolving funds have been established by act of Congress. In other words, there is no necessary distinction between the corporation and the department as to appropriations, but the more frequent characteristic is that the corporation has a single revolving fund while the department operates on an annual grant of funds without the authority to reuse income or receipts.

2. Expenditures: In the matter of expenditures there is not a clear line of distinction for the reason that, while corporations were formed largely for the reason that administrators preferred to find a method of procedure which would permit expenditures by whatever rules they, themselves, chose to adopt, this feature has not until very recent times been the subject of general congressional enactment, and it cannot be said with confidence that Congress has announced a policy with respect to expenditures of corporations as such. Instead, the approach has been to grant to certain corporation an all-inclusive authority to determine for themselves the character and necessity of their expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid. Where such language appears in the act chartering the corporations, there can be no question but that Congress has determined that the congressional or statutory rules otherwise directing how the public moneys shall be spent are not of their own force to apply to the corporation, but rather that the corporation shall determine for itself what methods, procedures, etc., should be employed.

Where the language as to determining the manner of expenditure, etc., does not appear in the corporate charter, the question is not at all clear. Those operating on behalf of the corporations undoubtedly would assert the right to make such determinations on the basis of the rationale for the employment of the corporate form in the first place, and there are numerous legal materials (not in the form of specific legislation or direct judicial holdings) strongly supporting that view. However, my attention has never been drawn to an act of Congress specifying that the laws of the land do not apply to Government corporations merely because they are Government corporations, and in the absence of such indication of congressional policy, I am not in a position to conclude broadly what difference, if any, there is as to expenditures where the corporate charter does not contain the language above referred to. Some distinction may be found, of course, where the restrictive statutes in terms apply only to the direct expenditure of appropriations as such.

3. Accounting: The matter of accounting is somewhat more readily describable. The accounting required of the departments spending the appropriations of the Congress follows a well-settled and long-established practice, even antedating the formation of our Government. In essence the procedure consists of "advancing" a sum appropriated to an individual officer operating with or for the department responsible for the expenditure. That officer at that time becomes technically indebted to the United States for that amount until he "accounts" for the same. This is done by the process of showing a lawful expenditure of the sum, with the result that if, in the opinion of the auditors (or, on appeal, of the Comptroller General), the expenditure is shown to have been an unlawful one, no credit is allowed for the item, the officer's indebtedness remains, and he is subject to suit therefor in the United States courts, at which stage the question of legality of the expenditure is tested judicially. The ruling of the accounting officer is binding upon the departments, but, of course, is not binding in any way upon Congress or the courts.

In recent years that procedure has been altered slightly for the civilian operations of the Government by the enactment of the Certifying Officers Act, under which the particular person responsible and accountable for the legality of the expenditure is not the fiscal officer to whom the money was advanced and who drew the check, but, rather, is the "certifying officer" who approved the payment and on whose approval the disbursing officer relied.

The result, of course, of that audit and settlement procedure is that the payments are made by the administrative officer at the risk of the subsequent disallowance by the General Accounting Office, and in the event of such disallowance, assuming its correctness, the amount is recoverable by the Government either from the payee who received it in error, or from the officer responsible for the payment, or from his surety. The audit procedure varies widely according to the circumstances and needs of the situation; that is, it may call for a voucher audit here in Washington (which may be more or less detailed), or it may be found more appropriate to make a field audit at the site of the operations. Also the audit does not necessarily call for a review of each item of expenditure; it is essential that under that plan all expenditures are at least subject to such audit.

On the other hand, the accounting required of corporations proceeds upon a somewhat different basis. In the Government corporation control acts of 1945 Congress directed for the first time that the General Accounting Office undertake annually to make a commercial, corporate type of audit of the financial transactions of all the Government corporations. Also, the Comptroller General was authorized to utilize that type of audit (in those few cases where the corporations are financed by departmental-type appropriations) for the purpose of settling the accounts of the officers to whom appropriations are advanced. A regulation has just been adopted to that effect, so that the same audit procedure will apply to corporations, whether they be financed by a capital grant or by an annual expenditure type of appropriation. The commercial, corporate type of audit comprehends an examination of the actual books and records of the agency, and a survey of its transactions on a test-check basis, leading up to a comprehensive annual report to the Congress, to the President, and to the corporation. The result, of course, is an over-all or agency-wide survey type of audit which does not necessarily call for examination of detailed transactions, but which does include the résumé of the entire function under review, its background, authority, and methods of operation.

The remaining significant difference is that the survey type of audit depends upon corrective action being taken by the management or by Congress to prevent future errors, but it does not include any independent machinery for collection back where erroneous payments are found to have been made. On the other hand, the accounting required for appropriations does not call for a survey or periodic report on the operations as a whole, but it does include the important element of control of expenditures through the power of disallowance and the specific authority for, and mechanics of, collection back where erroneous disbursements are shown to have occurred.

4. Purchases: The important distinction with respect to purchases is that created by section 9 of Public Law 600, approved August 2, 1946, when (and, as I believe, for the first time) Congress gave thorough consideration to the assorted freedom of corporation from congressional control and directed that in the single case of purchase and sale transactions the corporation should be required to follow the departmental statute as to advertising for bids, only when there is involved an item of expenditure from their administrative expense funds, which comprises a relatively minor class of transactions. In contrast, where operating expenses are involved, the corporation is not normally required by statute to advertise before purchasing; whether it shall do so is left to administrative regulation or discretion.

5. Receipts: The matter of receipts has been perhaps sufficiently covered above; to reiterate, the department normally must deposit its receipts into the general fund of the Treasury, without authority to reuse them as such, while generally the Government corporation retains its receipts in a revolving fund and may reuse them without congressional reappropriation. The only restriction in that regard would be that the expenditure somehow must be within the framework of the corporate purpose and must be within the budgetary program passed upon by Congress in the annual Government Corporation Appropriation Act, although I do not understand that this sanction would necessarily include a limitation upon the amount of money expended for any corporate program, unless adopted by specific congressional action.

6. Law suits: The matter of law suits does involve a certain distinction. Normally a Government department by itself is not suable, for the reason that the department is not an entity apart from the Government and is entitled to the immunity from suit which attaches to the sovereign. The corporation, however, is suable as such, and that distinction has been given full effect by the administrative agencies and by the courts (see Keifer & Keifer v. R. F. C. (306 U. S. 381)). To a certain extent within the past year that difference has lost significance because of the enactment of the Federal Tort Claims Act, since now that branch of litigation with respect to tort claims is covered by that act, irrespective of the prior difference characterizing the corporations. For suits under contracts the difference is not perhaps as real as it may appear to be on the surface, since, under the Tucker Act, the Government is fully suable for breeches of contracts by the departments, and since, in fact, the Government had also a number of times been held to be suable for the defaults of Government corporations. Thus, the difference is believed to be largely one of procedure and not of substantive importance.

Your second question is:

"(2) What important statutory provisions of a restrictive or exemptive nature apply to Government corporations which do not apply to other Government agencies, and correlatively what restrictive and exemptive measures apply to ordinary Government agencies which do not apply to Government corporations?"

Although freedom from general laws regulating the administration of Government departments and agencies is frequently cited as one of the principal reasons for the creation of Government corporations, in practice that freedom has varied greatly, depending on the language of the corporation's charter or other enabling legislation as well as the language of the general laws. A good many of the Government corporations have specific authority in their charters to determine and prescribe the manner in which their obligations shall be incurred and their expenses allowed and paid (RFC), sometimes specifically without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds (HOLC). In other cases such determinations are expressly made final and conclusive upon all other officers of the Government.

However, other statutes have modified such broad authority. Annual appropriation acts authorizing the expenditure of corporate funds for administrative expenses have limited the amount and specified the objects of such expenses. Also, the practice has become prevalent in some such cases of granting special authority to incur expenses for which express authority is required by general provisions of law. Such appropriation acts have even prohibited the use of corporate funds for certain purposes. Examples of these types of provisions will be found in title III of the Government Corporations Appropriations Act of 1947.

In cases where the board of directors has authority to determine the corporation's expenses, without regard to other law, the Comptroller General has held that in the absence of the exercise of such authority the general law applied.

Most of the so-called "restrictive statutes" apply to appropriated funds, and so are claimed by the corporations not to affect nonappropriated funds of a Government corporation. Other statutes, directed at Government activities in general, may by their terms or interpretation affect the corporations. Public Law 600, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved August 2, 1946, authorizing certain administrative expenses in the Government service, applies to wholly owned Government corporations. One reason that the question as to what statutes do or do not apply to the Government corporations has not been fully settled is that until recently the General Accounting Office has had no occasion to pass on expenditures of most such corporations.

For that reason, it is not possible to answer your question definitively and in general terms; an important specific difference as to the law governing public purchasing has been explained above.

Your third question is as follows:

"(3) The distinction in foreign law between the operation on their territory of foreign-owned public corporations or their subsidiaries, as opposed to field offices of executive agencies of foreign governments."

One phase of this question—that is, whether a Government corporation may not operate abroad more conveniently and more effectively where a commingling of activities with the local governments may be required—has already been extensively covered by the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives issued in connection with the bill to reincorporate the Institute of Inter-American Affairs (House Rept. No. 955, 80th Cong.). Another phase involves the question whether the freedom from local taxation, police regulation, customs laws, and other incidence of foreign law to which the United States would be entitled under the doctrine of sovereign immunity, may in some countries be lost where the choice is made to operate not directly as a Government operation, but indirectly through the medium of a corporation, especially so if the charter be obtained under foreign law. In the time available I am not in position to examine the question adequately, but a number of useful references on this question are found in volume II of Hackworth's Digest of International Law at pages 471, 475–487. See also the references in Judge Mack's opinion in The Pesaro (277 Fed. 473); Hersey, The Immunity of Foreign States When Engaged in Commercial Enterprises: A Proposed Solution (27 Mich. Law Rev. 751). (It may be found necessary to provide by statute, by treaty, or by Executive agreement for this immunity in carrying out the program.)

It is recognized that the foregoing discussion is not an adequate treatment of many of the questions you raise, and it is suggested a more helpful treatment definitely could be furnished if there were available specific data as to what activities the contemplated agency is planned to undertake. If I can be of further aid in the matter, particularly along the lines just suggested, please feel free to call upon me. If you prefer, it might be more effectively considered through the medium of an informal discussion with members of my staff, who, of course, would be available at your call.

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I have submitted an amendment to S. 3936, the defense production bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO S. 3936, AS REPORTED AUGUST 7, 1950, TO AUTHORIZE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD TO PRESCRIBE REGULATIONS REGARDING REAL-ESTATE CREDIT EXTENDED OR INSURED BY THE GOVERNMENT, AS WELL AS BY PRIVATE SOURCES, BUT ONLY ON NEW CONSTRUCTION

On page 59, in line 10, strike out the words "Such regulations" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Such regulations may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, include provisions relating to any real-estate construction credit extended, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended. Regulations issued under this section."

On page 62, strike out lines 12 to 19, inclusive.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, title IV of the bill covering control of consumer and real estate credit, gives authority to the Federal Reserve Board to reimpose regulation W, governing consumer credit.

It also provides in section 602 that the Board shall have authority to prescribe regulations with respect to real-estate construction credit, including maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit and other related matters.

Section 602 (d) (1), page 62, lines 12 through 19, specifically provides that the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any agency of the Federal Government. Thus, the powers of the Federal Reserve Board are limited to the control of conventional loans on real estate construction. The powers would not be applicable to real estate construction credit where the loans are made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government.

Section 605 of this title now provides that the President may, after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, reduce the maximum authorized principal amounts, rations of loans to, value or cost, or maximum maturities on loans made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government. It would also provide authority in the President to reduce or suspend entirely any authorized loan program of the Federal Government, upon a determination that such action is necessary in the public interest. It is specifically provided that consideration shall be given, in the exercise of these powers, to the preservation of the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans. This section authorizes restrictions of all new credit, whether new construction or existing housing.

The amendment I have submitted would provide that the authority of the Federal Reserve Board shall extend to and include real-estate construction credit, where the loan is made, guaranteed, or insured by the Federal Government. It would delete this exception to the powers of the Board in this field.

The amendment would retain in the President the power, after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, to bring the Federal programs into line with the restrictions placed upon private lenders by the Board—whether or not their loans are guaranteed or insured by the Government. In other words, it is expected that the Board would exercise its functions by restrictions upon private lenders whether or not their loans are insured or guaranteed by the Federal Government, but that the Federal agencies would, by their regulations, restrict their maximum guaranties, maturities, and so forth, accordingly.

The authority of the President to reduce or suspend entirely any authorized loan program would be retained if in the judgment of the President, after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, such action is necessary in the public interest. The proviso with respect to veterans' preferences would be retained.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks I wish simply to call particular attention to the statistics and figures regarding the question of real-estate credit found on page 44 of the report on the bill, which is a very excellent report, and calls attention to the extremely serious nature of the expansion of mortgage credit. I read only an excerpt to indicate what this is about:

REAL ESTATE CREDIT CONTROL

NEED FOR CONTROL

The unrestricted continuation of real estate lending at the current rate would be a major inflationary force during the current defense period.

Outstanding mortgage debt is now more than three times as great as all outstanding consumer credit and is currently increasing at a rate about twice the rate of increase in consumer credit.

[In billions of dollars]

	Nonfarm mortgage debt	Mortgage debt on 1-to-4-family houses	Total consumer credit
1941	32.4	19.4	9.9
1949	[1] 7.0	[1] 37.4	18.8

[1] Estimated.

Expansion of mortgage credit contributes not only to the demand for labor, materials, and equipment that go into housing and other construction, but, by increasing available purchasing power, also increases the demand for all other goods. The expansion of such credit has been a necessary factor in the provision of urgently needed homes and other essential construction. However, when our now expanded defense needs are added to the current unprecedented demand for new homes and other buildings, a severe strain is being placed on the resources of the building industry and related construction materials industries. With these industries already operating at capacity new credit cannot increase the general availability of goods or facilities, but must result (as we have seen in the past few months, even before the Korean outbreak) in higher prices. Similarly, when industry operating at capacity diverts or prepares to divert a part of its production to defense uses, there will be inflationary tendencies unless other demands for its production are correspondingly decreased. Curtailment of credit is an effective means for decreasing such other demands and thereby makes easier the release of manpower and critical materials for our defense needs.

The total nonfarm real estate mortgage debt outstanding at the end of 1949 was $57,000,000,000, an increase of 75 percent from the $32,400,000,000 at the end of 1941. As a matter of fact, virtually all of this increase has occurred since 1945. Over 60 percent of this debt was secured by one- to four-family homes, about 20 percent by multifamily structures, and less than 20 percent by commercial or industrial properties. Home mortgages made in the first half of 1950 amount to about $6,500,000,000 or at an annual rate of $13,000,000,000. The net increase in home mortgage debt outstanding during the first half of 1950 (after regular amortization and other repayments) was about $3,000,000,000, bringing the total outstanding on June 30 to about $40,000,000,000 or double the figure outstanding at the end of World War II.

In the first 6 months of 1950 (before the Korean outbreak) construction activity as a whole was 20 percent above 1949, and housing starts were 50 percent above 1949. Prices of building materials had climbed back almost to the postwar peak; during the single month of July, the index rose an additional 3 percent. From all indications prices of both building materials and new housing will continue to increase sharply unless adequate measures are taken promptly. The repercussions of price increases in the construction industry will be felt throughout the entire economy. We cannot maintain the present high level of construction and at the same time meet our new military commitments without running the risk of widespread and serious inflation.

Even more important than the need for avoiding inflation is the necessity for curtailing construction which takes materials and labor needed for military production. The construction industry is an important consumer of steel and other materials in short supply. It employs hundreds of thousands of skilled workers now in great demand. Curtailment of construction will result in the curtailment of demand for the great variety of commodities needed to furnish and equip new buildings, e. g., house furnishings, furniture, and equipment. Construction as usual would greatly impede the acceleration of our defense output, the immediate objective of our Nation.

Historically, high rates of investment in new construction have occurred during periods of liberal credit. Real-estate investment by its nature is usually accomplished by extensive use of long-term borrowed money. It is, therefore, an activity peculiarly sensitive to credit restrictions. Furthermore, control of credit as a device for controlling construction is more easily administered than direct limitations, priorities, and allocations. Credit control does not require elaborate administrative machinery and procedures onerous to both the Government and the public. While more direct controls may prove necessary if a drastic curtailment is required, as a practical matter they cannot be so quickly applied.

Mr. President, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the tentative estimate by the staff of the Federal Reserve Board of loans made during the first half of 1950, on one- to four-family units, as follows:

	Billions
New housing:
Government insured	$1.5
Conventional	1.0
Total	2.5
Old housing:
Conventional	3.1
Total	4.1

Of the $4,100,000,000 on old housing it is estimated that $2,800,000,000 is involved in the purchase of housing, the remainder in raising money for other purposes.

Mr. President, I think that illustrates fairly clearly the seriousness of the question of the control of mortgage credit.

The way to protect the economic system from inflation of prices is to prevent demand from becoming greater than supply. The sound way to carry on the present military effort is to have an amount of purchasing power big enough to buy all the civilian supplies available, but no bigger. Purchasing power in excess of supply inevitably leads to inflation.

In the battle against inflation, we may have to use direct measures such as price controls and rationing as well as the indirect, but more effective, measures of monetary credit and fiscal restraints. But price controls and rationing in the face of growing credit and monetary inflation can only lead to grayer and grayer markets, with evasive practices widespread. Furthermore, as we have discovered in the past few years, the direct controls do not prevent inflation if credit and monetary expansion is not prevented. Direct controls in these circumstances merely change the form of inflation and the time at which it occurs.

Limitation of inflation by monetary, credit, and fiscal means requires the combined and coordinated use of these instruments. It is not possible to rely on consumer credit regulation, on real estate credit regulation, or other credit restraints, or on fiscal measures separately. They have to be vigorously used together.

Housing starts and extensions of housing credit are by far the greatest rates in the history of the Nation. This construction, so laudable in a time of peace, cannot be continued in a time of rapidly mounting defense effort. It must be in considerable part postponed if we are to have the men and materials necessary for military production.

Even the starts which have already been made and those which inevitably will be made in the near future will provide a great inflationary factor for many months. Mortgage credit will continue to be extended to permit—provide—their completion. Immense amounts of labor and materials will be involved. Contractors are frantically scraping the bottom of the barrel to accumulate the materials to finish these houses. Until it is clear that the men and materials are available to complete these houses, the inflationary pressures should not be increased by starting further houses. Certainly the Government should not positively sponsor the starting of new construction until such policy will not be conducive to inflation. Yet the Government agencies by their policies are still stimulating housing construction.

The legislation under consideration would give the Federal Reserve Board authority to prescribe regulations with respect to real-estate credit for new construction, in order to contain its inflationary expansion and reduce building during the emergency period, but this authority would apply only to real-estate credit for new construction not made, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government. At the same time, the legislation would leave to Presidential discretion, after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, the regulation of Government programs in the real-estate-mortgage field.

This approach is faulty because it divides administrative responsibility. The division of responsibility can seriously interfere with achieving the objectives of this legislation. If the credit terms permitted under the Federal programs are not restricted sufficiently, the Federal Reserve Board has the choice of going along with the Federal programs, or of tightening the terms on private credit severely. If it takes the first course, the purpose of this legislation will be frustrated. If it takes the second, borrowers and lenders outside the Federal programs are penalized or the business is driven into the Federal programs. If there is to be effective credit regulation in the field of new real-estate construction it must be a single regulation, regardless of what lenders extend the credit and whether the credit is insured, guaranteed, uninsured, or nonguaranteed.

That the Federal programs are important sources of funds for new construction is shown by the fact that over two-thirds of the rental units started in recent months have been financed with insured mortgages, and over two-fifths of the new houses sold have been financed with either FHA or GI mortgages. The terms on these mortgages are considerably more liberal than the terms on unguaranteed mortgages, permitting down payments as low as 5, 10, or 15 percent of the price, compared with 30, 35, or 40 percent in the case of mortgages made by banks, insurance companies and other lenders. Maturities run as long as 20, 25, 30 and even, in a few cases, 40 years, compared with the more conventional 12-, 15,- 18-, or 20-year terms.

This bill provides power to limit the terms of mortgage credit for new construction. But it would be futile and utterly mischievous to apply more stringent restrictions on uninsured than on insured credit. Such a procedure would simply cause the noninsured credit to dry up, and the insured credit to expand correspondingly. It would create arbitrary and unnecessary discriminations.

The essential point I am making is that there can be no effective anti-inflation regulation of real estate credit unless the terms prescribed cut across the board affecting Government-sponsored as well as other credit. Inflation control cannot be effective in one part of the field while forces of inflation are permitted to move forward unchecked, and indeed reinforced, in other parts.

Mr. President, at this late hour I merely desired to put into the RECORD these statistics, because I regard this amendment as one of the most important amendments in the whole control bill. It is one of the two features in the bill which actually is designed to have an effect upon the source of inflation rather than merely to postpone it, as control of consumer prices will do.

I hope to have an opportunity on Monday at least to summarize the effect of these statements, when the amendment is offered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I assure my distinguished friend from Arkansas, who is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that so far as I am concerned, having charge of half the time, I shall be more than happy to allow him to speak for 5 minutes on his amendment.

I appreciate what the Senator has said, and I am sure that those who read the RECORD tomorrow will understand exactly what he intends to do and what he believes should be done. I may differ with him, but he and I have always believed that we should at least have freedom of debate. As the hour is growing late, I am very appreciative of the action of the Senator in not going further, if that is agreeable to him.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the chairman of the committee very much for his courtesy. I recognize that he and the other members of the committee are familiar with the problem we are considering, and I desired particularly to get into the RECORD the explanation I have offered, as a source of information.

Mr. MAYBANK. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas is correct in assuming that we should have the information.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator very much. I may say that I have another amendment printed and lying on the table, which I shall not discuss at this time. I shall defer the discussion of it until Monday.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask that, in accordance with the agreement made earlier in the day, the Senate now take a recess until Monday at noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into by the Senate, the Senate will now stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon Monday next.

Thereupon (at 8 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, to Monday, August 21, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

On page 38, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

Subtitle B—Metals and Minerals

SEC. 311. (a) It is the policy of the Congress that every effort be made to stimulate exploration for and conservation of strategic and critical metals and minerals and other essential metals and minerals by private enterprise to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the United States, and that every effort be made to encourage the development and maintenance of sources of these metals and minerals within the United States in order to decrease and prevent, wherever possible, a dangerous and costly dependence by the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of such materials. To this end it is the further policy of the Congress that every effort be made to maintain a sound and active mining industry within the United States; to expand exploration for those ores and other mineral substances which are essential to the common defense or the industrial needs of the United States; and to prevent the discontinuance of mine operations under such circumstances as to make it probable that production would not or could not be resumed when needed for the national economy or security.

(b) In carrying out these policies small mining enterprises shall be encouraged to apply for aid under this subtitle, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Interior shall provide small mining enterprises with full information concerning this subtitle, and shall make special provision for expeditious handling of applications from small mining enterprises.

SEC. 312. A Minerals Conservation Board, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby established. The Secretary of the Interior shall be the executive chairman of the Board. The members of the Board may delegate their powers, functions, and duties, including those relating to appeals, to suitable officers of their respective agencies.

SEC. 313. To carry out the policy of this subtitle, the Board shall by regulation determine—

(a) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of exploration, on the one hand, and to the aid of conservation, on the other hand;

(b) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of exploration for any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, as specified by the Board;

(c) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of conservation of any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, as specified by the Board;

(d) the maximum price or the minimum price, or both, which may be paid for the purchase of any metal or mineral for conservation: Provided, That adequate allowance shall be made for depletion and depreciation in computing costs of operation or maintenance;

(e) the maximum amount or the minimum amount, or both, which may be paid on account of participation in the costs of maintenance for conservation with respect to any metal or mineral;

(f) the maximum amount or the minimum amount, or both, which may be paid to any producer or class of producers on account of exploration for any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, and the ratio which the Government's contribution for exploration shall bear to the contribution of any producer or class of producers for exploration;

(g) the particular metals or minerals or ores thereof and specifications therefor that shall be eligible for aid for conservation;

(h) the particular metals or minerals that shall be eligible for aid for exploration; and

(i) the time limits or dates within which contracts for aid for conservation shall terminate.

SEC. 314. (a) The Board shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out its functions and duties under this subtitle, and to provide fair and equitable treatment for all applicants for aid.

(b) The Secretary, subject to the rules and regulations of the Board, may prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subtitle and which must be complied with by applicants for contracts under the provisions of this subtitle.

(c) The Secretary may delegate any of his functions under this subtitle.

(d) All rules and regulations issued under the authority contained in this section shall be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 315. (a) Any producer may file with the Secretary an application for financial aid in carrying out a specified project for exploration or financial aid to conserve a deposit of ores or minerals. An application to conserve may be either for aid by participating in the costs of maintaining the property in stand-by condition or by purchasing all or any part of the metals or minerals resulting from production from such deposit. The application and the project for aid disclosed by the application must conform to the express policy and provisions of this subtitle and with the rules and regulations of the Board and of the Secretary: Provided, however, That simple contracts covering exploration projects shall be awarded upon application to small base metal mines and such contracts shall provide for the payment by the United States of one-half of the total reasonable costs of all tunnels, shafts, winzes, and raises in such a mine if the application or examination discloses that there is a reasonable promise of developing unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals. All contracts covering exploration projects shall contain provisions for repayment to the United States of sums paid by the United States pursuant thereto, liability for such repayment to be limited to payment of a reasonable portion of profits accruing from production resulting from such exploration.

(b) The Secretary shall cause qualified mining engineers, geologists, and any other necessary technicians to make examination of and to report on each application, and to certify it to the Secretary either for acceptance, as presented or subject to specified modifications, or for rejection. In the case of a project for exploration, the examining experts shall certify whether the project offers reasonable promise of discovering unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals. In the case of a project for aid to conserve a deposit of ores or minerals, either by participating in the costs of maintaining the property in stand-by condition or by purchasing all or any part of the metals or minerals resulting from production from such deposit, the examining experts, considering economic and practical factors, shall certify whether the project offers reasonable promise of maintaining in stand-by condition or in production, as the case may be, a property the production from which would, in the absence of financial aid by the United States, be discontinued or remain discontinued under such circumstances as to make it probable that for economic or technical reasons such production would not or could not be resumed when needed for the national economy or security.

(c) The Secretary shall either accept and approve the application, subject to any modification therein which he may require, or he shall reject it: Provided, That if the Secretary's action on the application conflicts with the recommendation and certification of the examining experts, he shall refer the application to the Board; and the Board shall either confirm and approve the action of the Secretary, or shall reverse it, or shall direct the Secretary to reconsider it. Confirmation or reversal of the Secretary's action by the Board shall be final, and direction to reconsider shall place the application in the same status it was in before action upon it by the Secretary. If the Secretary accepts the application, either in its original or modified form, the terms of the application and acceptance shall be merged in a formal, written contract. Any applicant who is dissatisfied with the decision of the Secretary upon his application, may at any time within thirty days after receipt of notice of the decision, unless further time is granted by the Board, appeal to the Board, and the Board, as expeditiously as possible, shall review the entire matter, make its findings thereon, and notify the applicant of its decision, which shall be final.

(d) All metals or minerals purchased under the provisions of this section, or such equivalent quantities thereof as may be permitted by the contract with the producer, shall be delivered by the producer to and shall be received and paid for by the Administrator of General Services at such places and times as may be provided in the contract. The Administrator shall from time to time, and in any event before selling them in the open market, notify the Munitions Board of the inventory of metals or minerals held by him under the provisions of this subtitle and shall continue to hold all metals or minerals received by him under this subtitle until at least sixty days after he has given the Munitions Board notice that they are so held. The Munitions Board may, as long as any such metals or minerals are held by the Administrator, (1) direct the Administrator to transfer any of them to the national security stockpile in accordance with the provisions of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, as amended (53 Stat. 811, 60 Stat. 596), or (2) within sixty days after such notice from the Administrator direct him to hold any such metals or minerals listed in the notice until sixty days after the next succeeding appropriation for purchases for the stockpile has become available. Unless notified by the Munitions

Board to either transfer any of such metals or minerals or to continue to hold them as provided in this subsection, the Administrator shall sell them in the open market if and when open-market prices will return to the Government at least the approximate average price paid by the Government for the metals or minerals, and only in such quantities as will not materially depress the market. No metal or mineral shall be transferred into the national security stockpile under the provisions of this subtitle unless the material has been found to be strategic and critical as provided in the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and meets established specifications as to quality and degree of refinement or processing, and unless such transfer is consistent with the current stockpiling procurement program of the Munitions Board. Any transfer of metals or minerals to the national security stockpile shall be covered by a transfer of funds from appropriations available for purchases for the stockpile to the Administrator in amounts approximating what the cost of the metals or minerals would have been if purchased in the open market at the time of transfer.

(e) Contracts entered into under the provisions of this section may be entered into without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or other provisions of law prescribing the manner of making contracts on behalf of the United States.

(f) No contracts shall be entered into under the provisions of this section for a period exceeding two years.

SEC. 316. As used in this subtitle—

(a) "Secretary", standing by itself, means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) "Administrator" means the Administrator of General Services.

(c) "Board" means the Minerals Conservation Board.

(d) "Exploration" means exploration in the United States for unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals, including undeveloped extensions of known deposits, conducted from the surface or underground, by surface trenching, core or churn drilling, tunnels, raises, winzes, or shafts, including recognized and sound procedures for obtaining pertinent geological information, and including metallurgical research on processes for the production of such metals or minerals.

(e) "Production" means the production of ores or minerals from mines in the United States, or from tailings, dumps, slags, or residues of such mines, which the Secretary determines would, in the absence of financial aid by the United States, be discontinued or remain discontinued under such circumstances with respect to each particular mine as to make it probable that for economic or technical reasons such production would not or could not be resumed promptly when needed for the national economy or security.

(f) "Small base metal mines" means mines or deposits of ores primarily producing or which in the course of conducting an exploration project primarily produce lead, zinc, or copper ores, or ores containing a combination of such metals, the average aggregate monthly production of which does not exceed 100 tons of lead, zinc, and copper metal combined.

(g) "Producer" means any person or persons or legal entity by whom or for whose account and interest exploration, maintenance, or production is to be or is being performed.

(h) "United States", when used in a geographical sense, means the United States and its Territories and possessions.

SEC. 317. This subtitle shall not be construed as superseding or amending the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 755), as amended.

AMENDMENTS

Intended to be proposed by Mr. MILLIKIN to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

AUGUST 18 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

State is now asking as an increase in this area, through our Appropriations Committees, is an estimate made up long before Korea. Months ago this estimate ground through the mechanics of the Government departments. Of that amount, $41,000,000 will go to build the facilities referred to by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]. Another seven or eight million dollars will go for other long-term facilities that take a year or 2 years to build. Thus not over half of this $89,000,000 is for actual operations.

Mr. President, I would point out to those who heard the questions of the Senator from Virginia that General Sarnoff estimated in the hearings on Senate Resolution 243 that $200,000,000 is required to provide the United States with an adequate world-wide network. Yet the State Department is asking for only $41,000,000.

Mr. President, this pre-Korean request for $89,000,000 has been cut very substantially by the House. I urge upon the Senate a restoration of the amounts cut. Any cut would be extremely bad judgment at this time and would not meet with the approval of the American people, as the Gallup poll demonstrates. Further, the sum should be greatly increased. I hope we can cooperate with the Department of State in insuring a great increase in activity in this area. We should not adjourn until this is done and I hope we can get the leadership for it. I do not think $300,000,000 for operations this year would be a bit too much. It is approximately one or one and a half to 2 percent of what we propose to spend on our military policy. I have previously given to the Senate several ideas on how extra money can productively be spent.

Mr. President, there is one other newsstory I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate. This appears in this morning's papers. It is further evidence of the kind that is piling up all around us, wherever we look, every day. The front page of the New York Times this morning has a story headed, "British labor asks world mutual aid to succeed ECA." Two paragraphs of this story are as follows:

FOE IS "POVERTY EVERYWHERE"

The object of the plan, according to the policy statement, would be "to attack poverty everywhere in developed and undeveloped countries alike."

It would amalgamate the efforts already being made by the United States, Britain, and the United Nations, to assist underdeveloped territories. Participating countries would contribute to its cost according to their abilities.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRITISH LABOR ASKS WORLD MUTUAL AID TO SUCCEED ECA—PLAN TO COMBAT COMMUNISM AND FASCISM IN UNDEVELOPED AREAS IS URGED BY PARTY—WOULD ENLARGE POINT 4—NATIONAL COMMITTEE TRANSFERS EMPHASIS FROM DOMESTIC GAINS TO PERIL ABROAD

(By Clifton Daniel)

LONDON, August 20.—A world plan for mutual aid to sustain the prosperity of the industrial nations and to combat communism and fascism in underdeveloped areas was proposed today by the national committee of the British Labor Party in its 1950 statement of policy and principles.

This plan, which would be undertaken by the free nations and would succeed the European recovery program in 1952, is similar to proposals already made by various individual statesmen, but it is the first of its kind to be advanced by the governing party of any major country. It is in effect a magnification of President Truman's point 4 program for aid to underdeveloped areas.

Morgan Phillips, secretary of the Labor Party, said that the plan was not a formal commitment on the Labor government to act on specified lines because any action would have to be preceded by discussion with the British Commonwealth, western Europe, and the United States. But the party's research organization, he said, has already been working on the problem.

FOE IS "POVERTY EVERYWHERE"

The object of the plan, according to the policy statement, would be "to attack poverty everywhere in developed and undeveloped countries alike.

It would amalgamate the efforts already being made by the United States, Britain, and the United Nations to assist underdeveloped territories. Participating countries would contribute to its cost according to their abilities.

While the western democracies must be strong enough to resist aggression, the labor statement said, armed strength is not enough.

"Rising standards of living," it declared, "are the strongest defense against infiltration by communism and fascism."

As the undeveloped areas mostly require technical and scientific assistance, the statements said, the British Government would establish a technical service to provide knowledge, experience, and skill for those areas—an agency comparable to the United States point 4 organization.

The mutual aid plan was outlined in a 39-page pamphlet called "Labor and the New Society," which the party's executive committee began pondering last May, after the election set-back that almost cost it control of the House of Commons and the Government. The pamphlet is not an election platform, but will form the basis for the platform that will be written when the date of the next general election is known. It will be discussed throughout the party and debated in October at the Labor Party's annual conference.

Drafting of the statement was completed after the start of the Korean war and the drive to rearm western Europe.

"Paying for defense is bound to limit the money available for social services or tax reduction," the policy statement warned.

GAINS TIED TO PRODUCTIVITY

Major advances in the social services, it added, will be possible only through increased productivity. Moreover, in the face of obviously hostile or indifferent public opinion as manifested in the election returns, the Labor Party leaders conspicuously soft-pedaled their plans for nationalization of further segments of business and industry.

Industrial insurance, cement, sugar, and minerals, all of which had been scheduled for nationalization in the last year's policy statement, were not mentioned in the 1950 version. Mr. Phillips said they were eligible for consideration but that the committee "did not think it wise at this stage to tie the party to a timetable for nationalization."

The statement said only that water supply would become a public service and that the Labor government would put into effect the legislation already enacted to nationalize the iron and steel industry.

As for other industries, it said that the Monopolies Commission would be strengthened and that "monopolies will be transferred to public ownership if they cannot be dealt with in any other way." Also, the Labor Government may "use its existing powers to take over concerns which fail the Nation" and establish public enterprises to compete with private firms that "are not pulling their weight," the statement said.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, the British Labor Party has taken over, in this recommendation, our point 4 program and has projected it at a high level of the British policy and, I hope, at a high level of international policy. Point 4 is designed to show people everywhere that we in the United States share the hopes, aims, and aspirations of the poverty-stricken and suffering peoples of the world, and that we are determined to help them solve the problems and secure a richer and happier life.

Point 4 is an answer to the Russian propaganda. Other facets of American foreign policy show also that we are not satisfied with the world as it is and that we shall devote our resources to the improvement of the suffering world; that we shall, in line with the recommendations of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], if we can achieve success in reducing our armaments, take billions of dollars saved out of the field of armament, into which we are unhappily forced, and devote them to the improvement of the peoples of the world upon whose understanding and good will Mr. President, our very future may depend.

EXPANSION OF RESERVE COMPONENTS OF THE NATIONAL MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Senate bill 960 provides for the construction, rehabilitation, expansion, conversion, and joint utilization of buildings, structures, utilities, and other facilities, including the acquisition of land, for the Reserve components of the National Military Establishment of the United States, and for other purposes. It was passed by the Senate on June 16. The House did not consider the Senate bill, but passed a bill of its own. There are differences between them.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the House bill, which is H. R. 8594, and amend it by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting Senate bill 960, thus permitting the bill to go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8594) to provide for the acquisition, construction, expansion, rehabilitation, conversion, and joint utilization of facilities necessary for the administrating and training of units of the Reserve components of the Armed Forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the language of the House bill after the enacting clause will be stricken out, and the language of Senate bill 960 inserted in lieu thereof.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BYRD, Mr. HUNT, and Mr. SALTONSTALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement entered into the time is divided equally between the proponents and opponents of any amendment that may be offered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of Senators, I appreciate that perhaps some Senator may wish to have a quorum call at this time. If not, I may say that some 10 amendments submitted by various Senators, most of whom I see in the Chamber, have been agreed upon. I ask that I may, with unanimous consent, if necessary, call those amendments up and get them out of the way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment now pending.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, several amendments have been agreed upon. For instance, the distinguished minority leader and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] worked out an amendment together. There is also an amendment by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and another one by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN]. There is also one which was submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], although I do not see him present.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. My understanding is that the distinguished chairman of the committee would like to proceed by taking up the amendments to which there will be no objection and on which there apparently will be no controversy.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. When those amendments are out of the way, a quorum call will be had.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Will these amendments necessitate a vote?

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not think so.

Mr. WHERRY. If not, I have no objection to proceeding without a quorum call.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, it will necessitate a vote to agree to the amendments. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the Senator wants to take up the amendment which I offered on behalf of myself and the Senator from Alabama. I therefore send the amendment to the desk. It is amendment B.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest that when the Secretary reads an amendment he read the author of the amendment and the letter appearing at the bottom of the amendment, so that we may identify them. A great number of amendments have been submitted.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Amendment B, offered by Mr. WHERRY and Mr. SPARKMAN:

On page 66, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

"(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such manner as to assure each individual business in the normal channel of distribution of such material of its fair share of the available civilian supply based, insofar as practicable, on the share received by such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators I should like to state that amendment B was originally offered as amendment I. The only difference between the two amendments is that in the original amendment I there is added after the word "material" the following: "to an extent which the President finds will result in a dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market." The remainder of amendment B is exactly as offered originally as amendment I.

Mr. President, I spoke at some length on this amendment when it was offered on August 15.

Since that date, I have added perfecting language to the amendment, which in no way takes away from, or modifies its original purpose, but which may serve to clarify the conditions by which the President shall be required to put civilian allocations into effect.

It was thought by some that if the President acted under title III and made allocations it would be imperative to allocate and distribute through normal channels of trade the balance of the civilian supply even though there might not be a dislocation. The amendment would leave it up to the President at that time. If and when he puts allocations into effect under titles I, II, and III of the act, and if in military use or in the interest of national defense he finds there is a dislocation, and a severe one, the amendment would become applicable.

I think it is a good amendment, and it was suggested by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]. I do not think I could conceive of its becoming applicable unless there was a dislocation. This makes it perfectly clear.

Mr. President, we all know it is certain that the President will move immediately into the application of voluntary agreements for the distribution of strategic materials.

We also know that sufficient of those materials must be assured for military and defense production, irrespective of civilian needs.

It is also possible that the progression from voluntary to mandatory allocations will be rapid, depending upon the results obtained by voluntary agreements, or the necessity for more rigid allocations and priorities possible only under mandatory controls.

This amendment deals only with the distribution of available civilian supply, after military and national defense commitments have been made. It deals particularly with the survival of small and independent business in such distribution.

The pending bill pays a great deal of lip service to small business. In it are several references to creating a desirable atmosphere for small business. Such wishful thinking in behalf of small business has been included in previous legislation, some of which is still in effect, but I can assure the Senate that little or nothing has been done to effectuate such provisions.

Mr. President, there is no provision in this bill—and I have been over it with a fine-tooth comb—that assures to small and independent business a fair and equitable position in the distribution of allocated materials.

To accomplish this purpose—and I am sure it is an important purpose to all the Members of the Senate—the amendment provides that any allocation contemplated under this bill must utilize the normal channels of trade.

In order to get rid of the black market we must see to it that production goes through normal channels of trade. Otherwise the independents will be crowded out of the picture and they will be the ones to rush immediately to new sources of supply in order to pass their supply on to their trade.

America became great as a result of the independence of action afforded the small business segment of our economy. In a free economy, independent business can purchase supplies from integrated business and still sell in competition with its larger competitors, and on many fronts favorably so.

In a controlled economy, however, this one weapon of freedom of movement is no longer available to independent business, because the very essence of controls means elimination of freedom of action. If, at the same time, we also destroy or divert the supply from the normal channels of distribution we sound the death knell of independent business.

Therefore, this amendment provides that whenever the President invokes allocation powers with respect to any material and he finds such allocation will result in a dislocation of normal distribution in the civilian market, the President shall allocate in such manner as to assure each individual business its fair share in the normal channel of distribution of such material.

The use of normal channels of distribution must be required; it must not be left to chance or to discretion.

However, complete flexibility as to the base upon which the President shall determine the fair share is contained in the last three lines of the amendment.

The President determines the fair share based, insofar as practicable, upon the share received by such business during a representative period, preceding June 24, 1950, and this determination is to be made by the President.

The words "insofar as practicable" give full latitude to the President or the Administrator to determinte an applicable base period prior to June 24, 1950. Or the amendment permits the President to determine another practicable base period, depending upon the circumstances affecting the particular industry.

Mr. President, I believe the purpose of this amendment is clear. I believe it is consistent with the objectives of the Banking and Currency Committee, namely, to protect American small business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment would require the President, in allocating materials, or in approving voluntary programs or agreements allocating materials, to assure a fair share of the supply to businesses in the normal channels of distribution.

The amendment is designed to help in solving a real problem—the tendency of integrated producers to discontinue supplying their independent nonintegrated customers, and to give all the available supply to their subsidiaries and branches. This obviously is unfair and harmful to independent business, particularly small business.

Questions have been raised as to the feasibility of establishing a formula of the kind proposed. We must be careful not to tie the hands of the President in the use of the powers given to him under the bill. The amendment has been modified to meet these problems, as far as seems possible without interfering with the objective. The requirement does not apply unless the allocations will result in a distortion of the normal civilian distribution, so that the President will not be required to undertake extensive allocations unnecessarily.

The shares of the businesses in the normal channels of distribution, which are to be assured under the provision, are to be fair shares, based so far as practicable on a pre-Korea base. There is, of course, no assurance that this will be sufficient to meet the full needs of the business, or even to keep it in operation. Under present and foreseeable conditions, no such assurance can be given. Furthermore, I understand it is not the intention or effect of the provision to interfere or affect the requirements of the military or essential civilian or defense needs.

In the light of these changes, and with the understanding that consideration will be given to any changes which may prove necessary after experience with the provision, I see no objection to the amendment, aud urge that it be approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] for himself and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment marked "8–15–50 K," on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 56, line 21, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action."

On page 56, line 21, after the word "instituted", insert a comma and the words "or such liability is compromised."

On page 57, line 2, before the word "under" insert "or a compromise."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understand that the purpose of the amendment is to permit the President to settle triple-damage actions against sellers violating ceiling regulations. As chairman of the committee, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I would like to have my statement with regard to the amendment printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, Mr. WHERRY'S statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This amendment gives the President the right to compromise any liability for an over-ceiling sale, which might be assessed against the seller, if the buyer involved in the transaction fails to bring suit within 30 days of the sale.

The amendment provides further that if the President does compromise such liability, the compromise shall be a bar to further damage actions arising out of the over-ceiling sale.

As the bill now reads, the President has the right only to bring an action for treble damages, if the buyer has not done so within 30 days. It provides further that a judgment on such action will be a bar to any additional damage action by the President or by the buyer.

The amendment would allow the President to compromise as well as bring suit—and provides that a compromise would be just as effective a bar to further suits as a judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

(e) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities now owned by the United States Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, what amendment is this, and what is the purpose of it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is an amendment marked "7–21–50–A," offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have no personal interest in this amendment. Its application is in the State of New Jersey. In explanation of the amendment and how it would apply, I shall read a report by Lewis Sanders, as follows:

RINGWOOD IRON MINES—PLANCOR 662 (ALAN WOOD STEEL CORP.), PASSAIC COUNTY, NORTHERN NEW JERSEY

This property was purchased by the United States Government in 1943. The Government expended just under $4,000,000 in its acquisition and the construction of a concentrating mill with a capacity of 100 tons of crude ore per hour, enlarging the mine hoistways, equipping the mines, and rebuilding a 7½-mile standard-gage railway. The property includes dwelling units for 115 families.

The ore deposits include two developed mines, the Peters and Cannon, and a number of undeveloped ore bodies. Ground owned in fee 878 acres, and mineral rights on an additional 174 acres.

Ore in sight between 400,000 and 600,000 tons. Geological probabilities, based on the characteristics of both the developed mines and similar adjacent mines, favorable to substantial additional tonnages. Probable maximum possibilities of the district that can be served by the plant, 20,000,000 tons.

The Government did not complete the plant in time for operation during World War II. It was declared surplus and the Government has tried in vain since 1945 to find someone who would purchase and operate the property.

A year ago the property was brought to the attention of the undersigned. I have made a thorough engineering examination and report on the property and found that it was capable of profitable commercial operation.

I organized a group that agreed to provide the capital necessary to place the mines in operating condition and also furnish working capital. When it was attempted to close contracts for the sale of the product it was found that the blast furnaces would no longer buy the grade of concentrates which the Ringwood mill had been designed to produce as they are too high in phosphorus.

I have made a further investigation and report which shows that by installing additional ball mills, classifiers and filters in the concentrating mill a Bessemer grade iron concentrate running 69 percent iron and unusually low in silica can be produced.

Also that by installing pelletizing furnaces, for which natural gas has just become available, a very superior product, ready for the blast furnace, can be produced. This product would be readily salable and should command a premium.

The cost of the additional grinding equipment and the pelletizing furnaces would be about $800,000. It has proved impossible to induce private capital to make this additional investment.

Unless the Government will make the required additions to the plant it appears to be impossible to induce anyone to undertake its purchase and operation. If the present plant is cannibalized the ore deposits are probably permanently lost.

In my judgment the national situation in regard to iron ore reserves makes it important to mine all the small deposits possible before a major emergency arises. This will conserve the Great Lakes deposits which must constitute our reserves for an all out war since only here can production be expanded with sufficient rapidity to meet our needs for steel.

Experience has shown that it is not practicable to exploit these small iron deposits after an emergency has arisen. Scarce manpower and critical materials have to be diverted from immediate military equipment while the product of the mine does not become available for use until too late to be of real importance.

However, although the future situation in regard to iron ore reserves may become quite critical there is no warrant, in my opinion, for mining iron ore at a loss, subsidizing its production or maintaining iron mines in a standby condition, at considerable expense, awaiting an emergency. I fully concur in the refusal of the Munitions Board to designate the Ringwood iron mines as part of the national reserve.

I would recommend the completion of the Ringwood plant by the Government only on the basis that the Bureau of Mines finds that there is sufficient ore in sight to enable the Government to recoup the added investment. Also that a contract be obtained with an operator which will repay the Government's new investment within 6 years in addition to payments on account of the purchase price of the existing property.

The completed plant could produce, on two shift operation and a 5-day week, 250,000 tons a year of iron ore pellets of Bessemer grade running 69 percent iron and only 1 percent silica.

The economic results of the operation are estimated to be: Annual pay rolls, over $700,000; annual supplies, power, $600,000; annual to railroad for freight, $500,000; annual pay, United States Government, $95,000; annual income taxes, $165,000; annual net earnings, $175,000; annual depletion reserves, $345,000.

LEWIS SANDERS.

The author of this statement is Lewis Sanders, as I have said. During World War II he was a colonel, and was assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs, and is known to all the members of that committee who served on it during World War II. Mr. Sanders is a mining engineer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me with regard to the amendment be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, Mr. MAYBANK's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This amendment would authorize the President to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants or other industrial facilities now owned by the Government.

I recommend the adoption of the amendment.

The Government now has authority, under Public Law 883, Eightieth Congress (the National Industrial Reserve Act), to make improvements to plants designated as part of the national industrial reserve. The Government also has authority, under Public Law 152 to complete, rehabilitate, or convert surplus or excess plants owned by it but not in the industrial reserve.

The amendment would merely clarify the power of the Government to make improvements and additions to plants owned by it, whether or not in the industrial reserve.

However, I am a little uncertain as to the point at which the Senator would have his amendment go into the bill. In his printed amendment it is proposed that there be inserted at the proper place a new subsection (e). The amendment would seem to belong somewhere in title III but I find no appropriate place for a new subsection (e) in that title except in section 301 dealing with guaranties, and that would not appear to be the proper place. I wonder if the Senator would object to having his amendment made a new subsection (d) in section 303, to be inserted after line 14 on page 36. In that event the operations under the amendment would be covered by the borrowing power provided in section 304. If it is desired to have these operations covered by appropriated moneys the amendment could be added as a new section 306 at the end of the title. In either event the amendment would not, I suppose, preclude the use of any moneys otherwise available for these purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I now send to the desk an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] marked "8–16–50 A."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 31, lines 20 and 21, it is proposed to strike out "where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000," and insert "without regard to whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000."

Mr. MAYBANK obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, the amendment just read will merely provide that in the event any property is taken for defense purposes——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend until the Senate is in order. The Chair has frequently called to the attention of the Senate the difficulty of hearing in this room. The slightest conversation creates confusion. The Chair hopes Senators and their employees, and employees of the Senate, will cooperate in an effort to keep order in the Chamber. If anyone must converse with a Senator, call the Senator out. If it is not necessary to have a conversation, do not converse.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Presiding Officer. Mr. President, the bill contains a provision under which property may be seized for defense purposes, and very properly so. It provides that in the event of a failure on the part of the seizing Federal agency and the citizen to agree on price, 75 percent of the appraised price shall be paid in cash, and that litigation must be brought by the aggrieved citizen for the balance of the purchase price of the property.

As now drawn, the provision is that up to $10,000 the citizen can maintain a suit in the district court of the district where he lives, but if the claim goes beyond $10,000, then he must come to the Court of Claims in the District of Columbia. The purpose of the amendment is simply to give the citizen the option in each case, whether it is above $10,000 or not, of bringing his suit in the district court where he resides. I understand the amendment is accepted by the committee.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Would not exactly the same result be obtained by striking the language that is now in the bill?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I would say that the same result would not be so obtained. I asked the Legislative Counsel very much the same question, and they told me that the same result would not be obtained, because under standing law applicable to general litigation the $10,000 limitation does throws citizens into the Court of Claims when they have cases against the Federal Government growing out of ordinary transactions. It was the thought of the Senator from Florida, and as I understand, now of the committee, that in this kind of case, where the Government is taking property for defense or war purposes, the citizen should have the economic right to proceed in his own district, and I have heard no objection to that conclusion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask that a statement of the committee regarding the amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This amendment affects persons whose property has been requisitioned and who do not agree with the amount of the award made by the President. Under these conditions they may take 75 percent of the award and sue for what they consider should be the balance due. Under the bill as reported, such a person could bring suit in either the local district court or in the Court of Claims in Washington if the amount involved were under $10,000. Under the bill, if the claim were over $10,000, the suit could be brought only in the Court of Claims. This is consistent with the provisions of the Judicial Code.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida would permit a person whose property had been requisitioned to bring suit in his local district court, regardless of the amount.

I can see no objection to this amendment, and much merit in permitting suits in local courts. Accordingly, I recommend the approval of this amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 1140. An act to authorize credits to certain public agencies in the United States for costs of construction and operation and maintenance of flood protective levee systems along or adjacent to the lower Colorado River, in Arizona, California, and Lower California, Mexico;

S. 2491. An act providing for the conveying of land and buildings at Fort Phillip Kearney Military Reservation to the State of Rhode Island;

S. 2868. An act to incorporte the Future Farmers of America, and for other purposes;

S. 3698. An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish, upon a reimbursable basis, certain inspection services involving overtime work; and

S. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the entry, by the State of Missouri and by the State of Illinois, into a compact or agreement between the State of Missouri and the State of Illinois creating the Bi-State Development Agency and the Bi-State Metropolitan District.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 100) providing for the printing of proceedings at the unveiling of the statue of Brigham Young.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8112) to provide for the transfer to the States of the replicas of the State seals removed from the Chamber of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1320. An act for the relief of Mrs. Barbarita Romero; and

S. 2457. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of A. K. Chahroudi.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 70, line 20, after the word "Government", it is proposed to insert: "who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or who shall be an official required to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, on last Tuesday, August 15, the Senate agreed to an amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] which struck out all of section 708 beginning on line 7, of page 73, and substituted new language.

I have proposed an amendment which would add a provision in subsection (c) of section 708 and I would like now to offer that amendment. I realize that to do this it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Ohio was adopted.

I now formally make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

The Senator from Massachusetts can now offer his amendment to the amendment; and, without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to, and without objection, the amendment, as amended, will be agreed to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I thank the Vice President for putting the question on the amendment so quickly, but the amendment has got to be offered now in a slightly different form, and I should like to have the amendment in that different form stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to will again be reconsidered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. What amendment is it?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It is the amendment dated "8–17–50," lettered "J."

Mr. TAFT. Very well.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, in making the motion I have two purposes in view: First, I want to submit the amendment, which I have had printed, and which requires that the official approving voluntary agreements or programs be an official appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In the second place, I find that subsection (c) as agreed to could be clarified by rearrangement of the language, and I think that should be done.

I may say that I have discussed this matter with the Senator from Ohio and he has no objection to reconsideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that the amendment in a different form from the one previously reported at the desk?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Yes; it is in a different form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, as changed, will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall be delegated only (1) to officials who shall for the purpose of such delegation be required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless otherwise required to be so appointed, and (2) upon the condition that such officials consult with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I have talked with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from South Carolina and they both agree to the amendment. I hope it will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and without objection, the amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 35, line 9, after the word "materials", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I notice the Senator from Wyoming was on his feet, and was ready to make an explanation. I wish the Senator would tell us what the amendment will do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming has already been agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield for a moment I will state that I appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency when the measure was under consideration. I suggested an amendment to sections 302 and 303 to make certain that the development of domestic minerals, strategic and critical minerals and metals, would be within the scope of the bill. I suggested that the amendment be inserted in both sections. It came out of the committee in section 303, but it did not appear in section 302. Section 302 is the section which authorizes Government loans, and I felt that it was merely an inadvertence that the language "including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals" was dropped from the section which authorizes loans, and that is the understanding.

Section 303 is the one which provides for assistance in carrying out the objectives of this act by authorizing the President to make provision for the purchase or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, and so forth, and also authorizing him to make provision for the exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals. In other words, this amendment merely brings these minerals within the scope of loans as well as purchase and exploration.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the statement by the Senator from Wyoming is exactly correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an explanation of the amendment which has just been agreed to, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have discussed the subject matter of this amendment with the Senator from Wyoming. I believe he understands that in agreeing to an amendment to an amendment in section 303 (a), clause (2), the committee was attempting in general terms to afford the President a broad power to make provision for the exploration, development, and mining of strategic minerals and metals. With that in mind I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming which proposes to include in section 302, relating to loans to private business enterprises, the same language as the committee put in section 303.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated, and also ask that the clerk read a brief statement in respect to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 38, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "S. 3520" and insert in lieu thereof "Public Law 683."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The statement will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

This corrects a reference to the abacá bill which has now become law and should therefore be identified by its public law number.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated and considered immediately, and then I desire to make a short statement with respect to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, this amendment is required because of a misunderstanding concerning the provisions of Senate bill 3936 with respect to the marketing of milk.

It had been assumed that all milk producers would receive the same kind of treatment under the terms of this bill as presently written.

Actually, such is not the case. Only milk producers covered by Federal milk-marketing orders would be so protected.

The purpose of this amendment is to insure that fluid milk prices in different areas of the country which are not covered by Federal milk-marketing agreements would be fixed in the same ratio as that which prevailed in the pre-Korean base period.

At present the bill contains a provision of this nature which pertains only to the 150,000 farm families who now are subject to Federal milk-marketing orders. This amendment would remedy the inequity brought about as a result of disregarding the more than 700,000 farm families who are not covered by Federal milk-marketing agreements.

The amendment merely provides that in fixing milk prices the ratio between prices in different areas must be maintained. Since milk prices in different areas have been determined in the first instance by differences in milk quality and costs of feed, this amendment would simply direct the Administrator to take these various factors into consideration.

It is further provided that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture may decide that this formula would not be in the best interest of a given area, it need not be applied.

Because this amendment would insure a steady milk supply by guaranteeing equitable treatment to the more than 80 percent of farm families who are not covered by Federal milk-marketing agreements, its inclusion now would be in the best interest of both the farmers and the milk-consuming public.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has 5 minutes.

Mr. IVES. I am glad to yield to my colleague from New York, certainly.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator very much.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the senior Senator from New York concluded?

Mr. IVES. I may or may not have concluded. However, I now yield to my colleague from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with my colleague, the senior Senator from New York. This amendment would simply place all producers of milk on the same basis, whether they are protected by Federal orders or not.

I heartily favor adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, has the Senator from New York concluded his amendment?

Mr. IVES. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to submit an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York. I now send to the desk an amendment which I offer to his amendment, and ask that it be stated.

I may say that after long consultation with the Department of Agriculture and others——

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. IVES. Is the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to my amendment in the form of a substitute?

Mr. MAYBANK. It is.

Mr. President, I ask that my amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, line 16, after the period, it is proposed to add the following:

Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the minimum ceiling prices prescribed herein to producers of milk used for distribution for fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect milk supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall determine such minimum ceiling prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me say that last week I had a discussion with the Senator from New York about his amendment. I then took up the matter with the Department of Agriculture, and also had a lengthy conversation with Mr. Trigg, of the Department of Agriculture.

This morning I stated that the substitute I have now submitted had been suggested as a way to administer this measure in the interest of the people and in the way the Senator from New York wants it administered.

I told him that when he presented his amendment I would offer this amendment to it as a modification or a substitute which Mr. Trigg and others in the Department of Agriculture have approved and feel is feasible.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Has the committee considered the amendment?

Mr. MAYBANK. No.

Mr. TAFT. Do the other members of the committee favor it?

Mr. MAYBANK. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that the whole subject of price controls in this respect has not been studied or given consideration by the committee? Is not milk only one of a thousand different commodities, the price of which would be fixed by the measure now under consideration?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from New York will have to answer the Senator from Ohio on that point. The Senator from New York brought in his amendment recently and I said I would discuss it, and I did.

Mr. TAFT. I have not the slightest objection to either amendment; I simply do not know anything about them. I merely call attention to the fact that neither does any other Member of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, do I have any time at this point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York will have 5 minutes to speak on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. I should like to take 5 minutes, or a part thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from South Carolina concluded?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not have to yield; the Senator from New York is entitled to 5 minutes in his own right, at this time.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I should like to state that although I would prefer the amendment which I myself have submitted, nevertheless I realize the problem which has been stated so well by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. The amendment I have offered my not be workable. That being the case, I am perfectly willing to go along with the substitute amendment now offered by the Senator from South Carolina for my amendment.

In this instance, however, I would point out that the amendment I have offered is identical with a provision on this subject, now contained in the House bill.

Therefore, if the substitute amendment now offered by the Senator from South Carolina is adopted, after the Senate bill is passed and when a conference is had, the conferees will have an opportunity to consider both the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina as a substitute for my amendment and the provisions of the amendment I have submitted, which are identical with the provisions of the House bill in this respect.

For this reason, I am perfectly willing to join with the Senator from South Carolina in favoring the adoption of his amendment in the nature of a substitute for my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 34, beginning with the comma in line 19, it is proposed to strike out through line 21 and insert a period and the following: "After consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the guaranteeing agencies may prescribe the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guaranties."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment rises from a recommendation contained in a letter from the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Johnson, dated August 11, relative to section 301 (c), page 34, lines 19 to 21, wherein the Federal Reserve Board is authorized "to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guaranties." Secretary Johnson in his letter to the chairman of the committee pointed out that this language is not in accordance with the practice which prevailed and which was successful in World War II. He states:

> It appears to permit the agent to prescribe to its principal the forms and procedures which both principal and agents shall use, notwithstanding that it will be the principal's funds which are committed, and it is a complete reversal of the authority and practice which prevailed so successfully in World War II under the V-loan program.

Because of the need of coordination on this matter, I discussed the matter with Mr. Joseph P. McMurray, of the committee staff, and also with the counsel for the Federal Reserve Board and with representatives of the Defense Department. The discussions resulted in complete agreement on the desirability of this amendment. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the letter from Louis Johnson, the Secretary of Defense, dated August 11, 1950.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, August 11, 1950.

HON. BURNET R. MAYBANK,
Chairman, Banking and Finance Committee, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It has just been brought to my attention that section 301 (c) of S. 3936 as reported by your committee contains an amendment which may have serious implications. This is the provision which would leave to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, rather than to the President as in an earlier draft of the bill, or to the guaranteeing agencies as in Executive Order 9112, authority "to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extend practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guaranties" (p. 34, lines 19–21, of committee draft).

There can be no objection to that portion of the quoted language which requires uniformity, and indeed there is now being prepared in this Office a directive designed to insure this feature. However, the language seems objectionable in two respects. It appears to permit the agent to prescribe to its principal the forms and procedures which both principal and agent shall use, notwithstanding that it will be the principal's funds which are committed, and it is a complete reversal of the authority and practice which prevailed so successfully in World War II under the V-loan program.

It would, for example, make the agent, rather than the guarantor the arbiter of important matters relating to the latter's financial commitment such as the form of the guaranty agreement, the extent to which the guarantor might review and prescribe protective terms for guaranteed loans or might require reports with respect to loans outstanding, and the terms upon which the guarantor must purchase the loans. Clearly, the authority of the Board should be confined to the operations of the Reserve banks and should not extend to such activities and obligations of the guaranteeing agencies.

Accordingly, I recommend either that the language quoted above be deleted from the bill or revised as suggested in the attached memorandum or that the language of the earlier draft giving this authority to the President be reinstated.

Sincerely,

LOUIS JOHNSON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina lettered "N."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, in line with what has just happened, and in accordance with it, I should like to propose an amendment, which I do not have printed, having just learned of the occasion for it this morning. The amendment is on page 32, under title III, after line 19, to strike out lines 20, 21, and 22, and insert "any single agency of government, or may create a new agency." I desire to state the problem that is involved, and I read from section 302 in order that Senators may get an idea of what I think should be done:

> In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate.

That is simply a duplication, with four or five agencies trying to do the very same thing. It would create chaos. I happen to know that a gentleman who was called here by the Secretary of Defense last week and who was asked to head up the agency which might well handle the loan turned it down flatly, because he said the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and half a dozen other agencies were all going to have their fingers in it. So he would not take the position, and turned it down.

All my amendment would do would be simply to permit the President to designate a single agency of government, or to create a new agency if he so desired, in order that the loan business might all be concentrated in one agency. As written, the Department of the Army will be handling loans, the Department of the Navy will be handling loans, the Department of the Air Force will be handling loans, the Department of Commerce will be doing the same thing, as will any other agency engaged in the procurement of goods. The result will be that it will cost 10 times as much as it would if it were done by 1 small agency which would handle all loans made by the Government. I recommend that the Senate accept the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Section 303 (c), on page 34, provides:

All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section, shall be subject to the supervision of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. We included the provision regarding the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System at the request of members of the committee. I do not know which members, but the Board of Governors is given complete authority. I should hesitate to accept an amendment which had not been printed, particularly in view of the fact that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is supposed to have complete authority.

Mr. CAPEHART. The able Senator has missed the point entirely. The Federal Reserve Board will continue to act.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may have missed the point. It is rather difficult to understand an amendment which the distinguished Senator has stated he did not have printed. The legislative counsel and myself have been examining the provision, and we find that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System will have complete authority.

Mr. CAPEHART. I want to say again that the amendment I propose has nothing to do with the Federal Reserve Board, which will continue to do everything that it is now doing under the law. Under the provision of the pending bill a half dozen agencies would be set up to do what could better be handled by one agency. The provision now in the bill would make for chaos and greatly increased expenditures. As I stated a moment ago, one of the finest men in the United States was called in last week and asked to take the job of doing the work called for by the bill, in respect to loans, to act simply as the agent, having nothing to do with the Federal Reserve Board. He said, "Absolutely not. I will not do it." He said, "No one else can do it and make it work, if each of these agencies is going to be dictating to the individual who is to be asked to administer this portion of the act." I am merely trying to be helpful to the President of the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate the helpfulness of my friend from Indiana, who has been helpful in connection with many of the amendments. In committee we adopted several of them. But the Federal Reserve Board has the right to prescribe regulations in the interest of uniformity. In World War II the matter was handled under the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and we made a similar provision in this bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Federal Reserve Board still has all the power. The Senator is missing the point entirely in respect to what we are trying to do. My suggestion is that instead of having the matter handled by a half dozen different departments, we have the matter handled by one man or one agency, under the supervision of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was done this way in World War II. I am not missing the point. Federal Reserve legislation and OPA legislation and many other kinds of legislation are attempted to be written into the bill on the floor. The power is lodged in the Federal Reserve System, and was handled successfully in the last war by the Board of Governors.

Mr. CAPEHART. The various agencies handled it in World War II, and it was a very complicated matter. It did not work properly. If the Senator will consult the Secretary of Defense, he will learn that the Secretary prefers the matter to be handled as I have suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. What is the amendment? I have not heard the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been stated.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest that the Senator from Indiana might very well take up the matter with the chairman of the committee to see what can be accomplished. What has been adopted would not coordinate this procedure. It merely provides that after consultation with the Board of Governors, the guaranteeing agencies may prescribe forms and procedures to be utilized. It does not say they shall coordinate the actual loans after the forms have been prescribed. It seems to me something might be accomplished along the line suggested by the Senator from Indiana if he would write an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate having been exhausted, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, as it is.

Mr. CAPEHART. I should be very happy to withdraw it. It makes no difference to me. If the Senator from South Carolina will consult with the Secretary of Defense, he will find that the Secretary prefers to have it handled in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. MAYBANK. If I were to consult each of the secretaries, as the committee knows, each of them would have a different idea. We followed the law which was in effect during World War II, and we believe that the proper way to handle it is under the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, may I suggest——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot recognize the Senator from Vermont, because the time now is controlled by the two Senators.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to know what Senators in the front row are saying. When they face the Vice President, we who are seated in the rear of the Chamber are unable to hear what they are saying. We just voted on an amendment, and I do not know what explanation of it was made by either Senator, because when a Senator faces the Chair, we are unable to hear him, though we are seated but three rows back of him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair regrets that condition, but there is not much the Chair can do about it, unless he insists that Senators either raise their voices or turn around. It is not so essential that the Chair hear the discussion as it is that Senators hear it, although the Chair, of course, is always interested. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I send to the desk my amendment "O," dated August 18, 1950, respecting V-loan guaranties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read the amendment as follows:

On page 32, line 18, after "deliveries" insert "or services."

On page 33, line 13, after the word "deliveries" insert "or services."

On page 33, line 14, after the word "materials" insert "or the performance of services."

On page 35, line 3, after "deliveries", insert "or services."

On page 35, line 4, after "materials" insert "or the performance of services."

On page 35, line 7, after "enterprises" insert the following: "(including research corporations not organized for profit)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Secretary of Defense on this subject. I understand it was the feeling of the Armed Services Committee that this was the thing to do. I have here an explanation of the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the explanation.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

This amendment would extend the V-loan-type guaranty provided for in section 301 of the bill and the direct loans provided for in section 302 of the bill to contracts and operations providing for the performance of services. Those sections now apply only to contracts or operations providing for the production and delivery of materials. I do not believe that the committee intended to exclude contracts and operations involving the performance of services from those provisions. Service contracts which this amendment would provide for would include contracts for the transportation of miiltary personnel or of goods previously delivered, management contracts, surveying and map-making contracts, and research contracts. I think the importance of expediting such contracts is obvious, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment would also make it clear that contracts with nonprofit research corporations would be covered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I offer on behalf of myself, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 44, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "higher of the two" and insert in lieu thereof "highest of the."

On page 44, line 20, to strike out "differentials; and no" and insert the following: "differentials, or, (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 percent of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 66⅔ percent of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. No."

On page 44, line 25, to strike the word "higher" and insert in lieu thereof "highest."

On page 45, line 10, before the period, to insert a semicolon and the following: "and in establishing the ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment is designed to facilitate realistic and equitable administration of agricultural commodity ceilings.

Senate bill 3936 as reported by the committee and amended on the floor prohibits the establishment of any ceiling on agricultural commodities below (1) the parity price of such commodity or (2) the price received by producers during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950. There are a number of agricultural commodities which because of their seasonal nature were not marketed during this period, hence the effective minimum ceiling prices for those commodities would be the parity price. The provision contained in the amendment adding section 402 (e) (3) (iii) establishes an additional minimum ceiling price which will be applicable to these commodities for which the market was not active during the specified period. Such price will be the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, in which the market for such commodity was active, adjusted to a price in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950.

This will tend to assure an equality in treatment between producers whose commodities were not marketed during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, and producers of commodities which were marketed during the specified period.

Under existing law the price of fire-cured tobacco is mandatorily supported at 75 percent of the loan rate of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and the prices of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco are mandatorily supported at 66⅔ percent of the loan rate of Burley tobacco. The provision contained in the amendment adding section 402 (e) (3) (iv) would insure minimum ceiling prices for these commodities which would be the same percentage above the support price as the minimum ceiling for Burley tobacco is above the support price for Burley.

The second part of the amendment requires the President in establishing maximum prices for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season to give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of such agricultural commodity in the areas.

Some agricultural commodities have already been marketed at prices above the minimum ceiling prices specified in this section. The proposed amendment would require that due consideration be given to the establishment of ceiling prices on these commodities at levels which will afford producers in all marketing areas an opportunity to receive the prices obtained by the producers who marketed such commodities in areas prior to the enactment of this act. This paragraph also requires that due consideration be given to affording similar equitable treatment to producers of commodities that are similar to and produced for the same general purpose as commodities for which the marketing season began prior to the enactment of this act. This provision is limited to ceilings which may be established only during the 1950 marketing season and, therefore, may prove to be of limited applicability.

I urge that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. These changes were in the former OPA law, were they not?

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that was the case.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The House bill contains a provision which is rather vague in its meaning. It is similar to this proposal, except that it takes care of all types of tobacco except Burley tobacco, which has a different marketing season from that of the other varieties of tobacco.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Senator has a provision in his amendment which I do not understand. I do not think it is in the old act. It provides that the administrator shall take the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period in which the market was active, and then that it shall be adjusted to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers of agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950.

What does that mean?

Mr. MAYBANK. It means that if a commodity was not being sold between May 24 and June 24, its price shall be fixed so as to correspond with the general price level during that period.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President——

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I desired to be recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair could not recognize the Senator from Minnesota because the time is under the control of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I shall be happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to make a comment relating to dairy products. I could not quite understand whether dairy products would have parity or whether the prices which prevailed in the section involved would be the prices for dairy products.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. THYE. Yes, I do.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I remember, only four products were above parity, and it was understood that in general parity would be considered, but the price would be parity or the market price whichever was the highest. Special provisions are made for milk, to be consistent with the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act.

Mr. THYE. Prices of dairy products were exceedingly low in the month of June.

Mr. MAYBANK. They are seasonal products.

Mr. THYE. Likewise eggs.

Mr. MAYBANK. They are a seasonal product.

Mr. THYE. Would they receive parity?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; the ceiling could not be fixed below parity.

Mr. THYE. Dairy products and eggs would receive parity, because for them the prices were below parity in the month of June.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is my understanding, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, may I conclude my statement to the Senator from Minnesota?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I will yield only for half a minute.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was my definite understanding as to dairy products and eggs, because they were seasonal operations at that time, that parity would be the effective price for them.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know whether it is a good amendment or a bad amendment. I doubt whether any Senator on the floor knows whether it is a good or bad amendment. This matter should have been handled by the Department of Agriculture. It is another reason why we should have held a public hearing on the bill. We are trying to write an OPA law on the floor of the Senate. I certainly cannot advise anyone as to whether it is a good amendment or a bad amendment.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes.

Mr. THYE. Do I understand that there is a provision in the bill which provides that no regulation or price can be imposed without first having a hearing at which interested persons may appear and testify as to how it would affect the economy?

Mr. CAPEHART. The committee had no hearings on this subject. The Senator from Minnesota knows as much about it as members of the committee know about it. All that has been said on the matter has been said here in the past 5 minutes.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I understood and was informed by the chairman of the committee at an earlier time that while a hearing had not been held, any regulation imposed upon an industry or a producer could not be put into effect until such time as a public hearing had been held and the interested parties had had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is not a correct statement. The bill does not require it.

Mr. THYE. Then I should like to suggest that the Senators who are in charge of the time, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], settle their differences, because I notice the Senator from South Carolina is nodding his head in approval, and the Senator from Indiana says no.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator from Indiana. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. The amendment considers tobacco, and would control the price of tobacco as one of the agricultural products mentioned in it. Will the Senator from South Carolina at the proper time, if this title of the bill becomes law, accept an amendment including fish and processing of fish? That industry suffered greatly during OPA days.

Mr. MAYBANK. This amendment was drawn and discussed with the Agricultural Committee, and also with Mr. Trigg. It was discussed for several days last week. It was suggested that this would be the only way in which to deal equitably with products which had no marketing season in that period.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired. All time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I sent to the desk a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware offers a substitute in lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 44, beginning in line 11 with the word "higher", it is proposed to strike out through line 16; on page 44, line 25, to strike out the word "higher"; on page 45, beginning in line 10 with the word "nothing", to strike out through line 16; and on page 43, line 24, beginning with the comma, to strike out through the word "subsection."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the mover of an amendment is recognized for 5 minutes, and he is in control of that time under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Therefore, the mover of a substitute is in control of that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He is in control of 5 minutes on the substitute.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, when the Senator who moves an amendment has concluded his remarks, then——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The chairman of the committee is then entitled to 5 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is to exempt tobacco along with certain other agricultural commodities from any prospective roll-back of prices. If we are to consider the purpose of this legislation as being to control prices, it is absurd to start exempting a series of different commodities. If we are going to exempt agricultural commodities, we must also exempt wages. If we are to exempt both wages and prices, what are we talking about? The amendment I offer as a substitute would strike out not only the provisions of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, but also strikes out all other provisions in the bill which exempts any agricultural commodity from a prospective roll-back in prices.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the amendment I sent to the desk was not a roll-back amendment. It was an amendment on which the Department of Agriculture and several Senators conferred at length, because there was no marketing season for such commodities. I should like to refer to the Senator's amendment, if I may. In the amendment a provision is included which reads:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, whenever the President decides that either price ceilings or wage stabilization is necessary, he must simultaneously declare both into effect as of the same base period, such base period being a 30-day period selected prior to June 24, 1950.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My modification omitted that paragraph. I intend to offer that later provision as a separate amendment. It will be included in a separate amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator tell me what his amendment consists of?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is amendment 8–18–50–F, with the exception of the first paragraph, which will be offered as a separate amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I apologize to the Senator from Delaware. When he mentioned his amendment 8–18–50–F, I thought the amendment which he had offered was the one he referred to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment which I am offering now strikes out the proposed exemption for certain agricultural products. The effect, if accepted, would be that all agricultural products would be treated on a basis of equality with wages. If prices and wages are rolled back to some date prior to June 24, no exceptions would be provided for any agricultural commodity.

Mr. MAYBANK. The second part of the amendment proposes to limit the ceiling on agricultural commodities to the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950. Provisions of the bill with respect to parity and minimum prices for milk under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act are the result of long and careful study by the Congress designed to bring agricultural producers fair prices for their products. This principle should be recognized in this bill. Many amendments have been proposed which are designed to undo what the Committee on Agriculture and the Department of Agriculture has done for years. We have an 80-percent parity amendment proposed to this bill. I do not know whether such amendments are germane, but I, for one, will not undertake in connection with this bill to legislate on subjects over which the Committee on Agriculture has jurisdiction instead of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I understood the Senator to say a minute ago that the amendment is one that he had offered and had been discussed with the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MAYBANK. I said Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. As a matter of fact it has not been taken up with the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], and Mr. Trigg were present, and Mr. Trigg said this was the only way it could be worked out.

Mr. KEM. Were any hearings held in which people who were interested in agriculture were given an opportunity to present their views?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. Mr. O'Neil was there. The Farm Bureau was represented. There were present many who are interested in agriculture, outside of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am not going to let that statement go unchallenged. No one testified on this amendment in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. MAYBANK. I did not say anyone had.

Mr. CAPEHART. What did the able Senator just say?

Mr. MAYBANK. Let us keep the record straight. The Senator from Missouri asked if anyone appeared before the committee who was favorable to agriculture. I said that of course some had appeared in favor of agriculture. The Grange appeared. The Senator was present when Mr. Gauss appeared, and we had a statement by him. Mr. Kline appeared. But I never said they appeared in behalf of this amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. They appeared, but not in behalf of this amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I did not say they did. I said no one appeared except the Senators who talked to me, and it was not a committee amendment. Mr. Trigg, of the Department of Agriculture, and others suggested that the amendment proposed a fair and equitable way of handling the matter. But there was no hearing on this amendment, and it is not a committee amendment. That is why it is offered with the names "MAYBANK-CHAPMAN-ROBERTSON" on it.

Mr. CAPEHART. No one appeared before the committee in open hearing on title 4 or 5, or upon the subject we are discussing at the moment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I cannot agree with the Senator from Indiana that no one appeared on titles 4 and 5, because we had before us the Farm Bureau, the Grange, the Farmers' Union, and many others. Representatives of the cotton people also appeared on the matters dealt with by those titles.

Mr. CAPEHART. When those gentlemen appeared, titles 4 and 5 had not been written and had not even been discussed; they were not even in existence.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course titles 4 and 5 were not there, but we needed the advice of other people——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired. All time for debate on the substitute has expired. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute to the amendment, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. All time on the amendment has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] for himself and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I call up an amendment I have at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 65, between lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 606. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, each commodity exchange, whether or not designated as a contract market under the Commodity Exchange Act, shall take all action reasonable and necessary to prevent excessive speculation on margins in commodities traded in for future delivery on such commodity exchange. For the purpose of this section, excessive speculation shall mean (1) speculative trading in a volume in excess of the volume reasonably necessary to absorb hedging trades, or (ii) speculative trading of a character which causes or tends to cause unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in price.

(b) In furtherance of the purpose of this section the Secretary of Agriculture shall, whenever he has reason to believe there is, or is danger of, excessive speculation in any commodity traded in for future delivery on any commodity exchange, inform the appropriate control committee or officer of such commodity exchange, stating his reasons.

(c) For the purpose of this section, "commodity" shall mean and include any and all agricultural and forest products and by-products, whether or not produced in the United States.

On page 63, line 15, strike out "section 601 or 602" and insert in lieu thereof "section 601, 602, or 606."

Mr. GILLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The original bill contained section 411 which made it mandatory for the various commodity exchanges of the country to come under the authority of the President or whomsoever the President might appoint. The committee rejected that provision, believing that we should not legislate on agricultural business. Then it was suggested that such an amendment might be proposed, and it was discussed with me. I said that the Committee on Banking and Currency was not trying to rewrite the commodity and exchange laws of the country.

The Senator from Iowa has been a diligent student and an able and capable member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in trying to rewrite the laws relating to the commodity exchanges. I have discussed the amendment with him this morning, and he tells me the amendment provides for purely voluntary action on the part of the exchanges, giving them some authority to police themselves. He says there is nothing mandatory about it, that it does not put the exchanges under the Secretary of Agriculture, any more than they are now under him, or under the President, but that it makes it purely voluntary for the exchanges to police themselves. If I am mistaken, I wish the Senator would correct me.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. The distinguished chairman of the committee is entirely correct. Section 411 was in both bills, the House version and the pending bill. It provided for policing of the commodity exchanges by governmental agencies, just as the Federal Reserve Board polices the stock exchanges. But because of the fact that there was a feeling that this was amendatory of the Commodity Exchange Act, which is legislation of long standing, and should not be adopted as a part of this bill, the House eliminated it by a vote of 198 to 194, and the Senate committee eliminated it from the Senate version of the bill, the bill now pending, for the same reason, I believe, the chairman has just stated.

In order to meet a situation which has developed in the last 2 or 3 weeks, when prices of commodities and dealing in commodities on the exchanges have run hog-wild——

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Have they not authority to so police themselves now?

Mr. GILLETTE. Oh, yes; definitely they have that authority now.

Mr. THYE. Will not this amendment confuse? Will it not put fear into someone that it is mandatory? So long as they have the authority now and can do everything the amendment proposes, would we not be confusing the issue?

Mr. GILLETTE. I am sure the amendment will not confuse the issue, for the reason that they have the right to police themselves, but they are not compelled to police themselves.

Mr. THYE. Does this amendment compel them?

Mr. GILLETTE. It compels them to the extent that the Department of Agriculture can give them notice, if it thinks they are not adopting reasonable regulations, and under the penalizing provisions of the bill they will be brought under the law. A district court will have jurisdiction, and will determine whether or not the regulations are reasonable. The amendment will give that much control over them; but the policing will be entirely voluntary.

I am sorry the amendment could not be offered in time so that Senators could read it, but the Department of Agriculture sent it to me this morning, and this is the first I have seen it.

If it develops that housewives have a few extra pounds of sugar we are holding them responsible, and yet without any regulation at all we are letting the gamblers and speculators operate in thousands and thousands of pounds.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. If the amendment were agreed to, would it stop the selling of phantom wheat and other commodities, commodities which do not exist?

Mr. GILLETTE. Oh, no, it would not stop trading in futures. Trading in futures, of course, is in effect dealing in commodities which do not exist, because the transactions are not completed. It will ask the exchanges to regulate themselves, and will subject them to be brought under the jurisdiction of the courts, if they do not adopt reasonable regulations.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the able Senator from Iowa that very question. It seems to me the action set forth here is wholly voluntary. In other words, it is voluntary policing.

Mr. GILLETTE. It is.

Mr. SPARKMAN. But in the very last provision the Senator makes violators subject to the penalty clause contained in section 603 of the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not see who, under the provision of the first three paragraphs, would be answerable to that penalty except the Secretary of Agriculture. It seems to me the only person who is directed to do something is the Secretary of Agriculture. He shall report these things. It seems to me that if he fails to report he would be subject to the penalty. I do not see how anyone else can be subject to the penalty. I ask that for information, because I think the Senator is aiming at a very good objective.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I read from the amendment:

> To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, each commodity exchange, whether or not designated as a contract market under the Commodity Exchange Act, shall take all action reasonable and necessary to prevent excessive speculation on margins in commodities traded in for future delivery on such commodity exchange.

It would fix margins at 100 percent, which would eliminate trading on margins. This will never be necessary. But if an exchange fails to take reasonable action when necessary, it and its officers and agents are subject to fine and imprisonment under section 603. A fine of $5,000 would not make much difference to a commodity exchange. But under section 706 of the bill, the district courts of the United States are given jurisdiction over violations of the act generally and may enjoin any violation. So that with the provision that they are required to police themselves with reasonable regulation, if they do not, it would be a question of fact for the district court.

Mr. MAYBANK. What would be reasonable regulations? Very frankly I will say the first I saw of this amendment was about an hour ago. As I understand, its provision is purely voluntary.

Mr. GILLETTE. Definitely.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that the only person who could violate it would be the officers of an exchange.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. How could they violate a voluntary agreement?

Mr. GILLETTE. The question, under the penalizing clause, would be determined by the district court which has jurisdiction to determine whether they are carrying out the injunction to police themselves reasonably. It would be a question of fact for the district court.

Mr. MAYBANK. What would the fine be?

Mr. GILLETTE. Five thousand dollars is the fine. I may say to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who said he saw the amendment only an hour or so ago, that I saw it only a few hours ago.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me so I may ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Who determines whether the commodity exchanges have complied with the purpose or the letter of the law, assuming that the amendment might be written into the law?

Mr. GILLETTE. Under the penalty clause it would be the district court that would have jurisdiction.

Mr. AIKEN. And what is the penalty if they do not comply?

Mr. GILLETTE. A fine of $5,000.

Mr. AIKEN. In other words, they offer voluntary compliance, but if they do not comply they are subject to a fine.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. And that is a single fine of $5,000?

Mr. GILLETTE. It brings them under the penalty clause that is contained in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. For everything.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This provision, as I understand, has to do with general policing, and is not subject to the weakness that section 411 was subject to, which sought to control merely by controlling margins.

Mr. GILLETTE. That is true. Section 411 was amendatory to the Commodity Exchange Act. This is not. But the control sought under the original section 411 was purely one of defining the margins across the board, which I thought was one of the weaknesses, because it hit the legitimate trader as well as one who was merely speculating. This calls for self-policing in every way it may be done, and particularly safeguards legitimate trading in the commodity.

Mr. GILLETTE. Under reasonable regulations.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And as to punishment, that would have to be in a case where there simply had been willful disregard of the entire policing, would it not?

Mr. GILLETTE. Should the district court so find on the facts presented.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. In other words, the amendment does not lay down specific things to be done and not to be done and make them subject to penalty?

Mr. GILLETTE. Not at all.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have one-half minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if the amendment is strictly 100 percent voluntary and there is nothing mandatory in it, then why does it come under the criminal section?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I move to strike out the last two lines of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which are as follows:

> On page 63, line 15, strike out sections 601 and 602 and insert in lieu thereof sections 601, 602, or 606.

That would mean that any person who wilfully violated the provisions of section 606 could be fined not more than $1,000. Now what is the crime? It is a violation of the provision that they shall take all action reasonable and necessary to prevent excessive speculation. In subsection (b) it is provided that "the Secretary of Agriculture shall, whenever he has reason to believe there is, or is danger of, excessive speculation in any commodity traded in for future delivery on any commodity exchange, inform the appropriate control committee or officer of such commodity exchange, stating his reasons."

The Secretary of Agriculture, I take it, determines what action is necessary to prevent excessive speculation, namely to raise the margin from 30 to 60 percent. I have no strong feeling about the section, but this is a restatement of the provision the committee struck out. I do not object to the voluntary provision, but if this is supposed to be a voluntary proposal, let us make it a voluntary proposal. As a matter of fact, as it is, it gives more discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine what is reasonable action than the original section did.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, how much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. None.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Iowa offered an amendment. Is it agreeable to the Senator to accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], to strike out the last two lines of the amendment, and make the provision purely voluntary, with the hope that the Secretary of Agriculture and the commodity exchanges can get together and straighten out the situation by themselves?

Mr. GILLETTE. I cannot accept that amendment, because then we would simply request them to police themselves. There would be no authority behind the request. There would be no way to hold them responsible. That would be an entirely different provision.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to make a comment on the statement made by the able Senator from Iowa, because it was the exact answer I received when I previously raised the question, first, that it was entirely a voluntary policing. But when we study and digest the amendment we find the penalties, and the full effect of the penalties written into the amendment. Therefore the two answers I received simply do not coincide or jibe, because one was that it was a voluntary policing, and the other one emphasized a $5,000 penalty.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for 5 minutes in my own time.

Mr. WHERRY. How much time does the Senator from Ohio have? Is it 5 minutes?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, does the Senator from Minnesota desire any time? I shall be glad to yield the Senator 2 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have 5 minutes. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, may I be recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I asked the question whether this is a voluntary policing operation on the part of the trade. I was informed it was strictly voluntary. Then as we began to examine the proposed amendment we found that the penalty provision of $5,000 is written into the amendment, and that $5,000 can be imposed without any question whatsoever. Until such time as we definitely are certain that it is a voluntary policing operation and authorization under the act, I certainly do not feel that I can justifiably vote in favor of the amendment or agree to accept it.

Mr. GILLETTE. I regret very much that I was unable to make the matter clear. As I see it, section 411 provided authority for a governmental agency to issue regulations for commodity exchanges. If that provision had been adopted, the penalizing provision would have applied to a violation of the regulations.

However, section 411 has been stricken out, and now this amendment proposes that in lieu of having the governmental agency issue regulations, the commodity exchanges shall be asked voluntarily to police themselves with reasonable regulations.

The first provision of the amendment states that they are directed to police themselves and to apply reasonable regulations. The question of whether the regulations are reasonable is one for the district court to determine. At no point is there a governmental regulation, if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Is not the contrary true, namely, that the Secretary of Agriculture can notify the commodity exchange as to the appropriate controls which he thinks ought to be imposed in order to take reasonable action to prevent excessive speculation; and if that is not complied with and if excessive speculation is not prevented, then, in the words of the Secretary of Agriculture, the commodity exchange can be haled into court and prosecuted and penalized under section 606. If the provision does not mean that, I do not see that it has any meaning at all.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is incorrect. The amendment suggests that the Secretary of Agriculture with the reports and the information he has, can call attention——

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, "inform" is the word that is used—a positive direction to the commodity exchange in regard to what is reasonable and necessary in order to prevent excessive speculation. If the language does not mean that, then there is no meaning at all to it.

Mr. GILLETTE. No; he would inform them as to the facts. They are to police themselves by means of regulations which they regard as reasonable. They adopt the regulations after the facts they obtain are before them and after the facts brought to their attention by the Secretary of Agriculture are before them. If the regulation they adopt then is unreasonable, they will be subjected to the penalty clause. No regulation is issued by any governmental agency whatsoever.

Mr. BRICKER. But the information given them by the Secretary of Agriculture fixes the standards upon which they must determine whether there is excessive speculation.

Mr. GILLETTE. It is undoubtedly a fact that a district court would take into consideration if it was determining the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the regulations issued.

Mr. BRICKER. Then under the amendment there will be three paragraphs of indefinite premises, finally leading up to a provision that the Secretary of Agriculture shall inform the commodity exchange what it will have to do if it is not to be subjected to a penalty of $5,000 for failure to comply.

Mr. GILLETTE. But the alternative is to leave them with no regulation whatsoever, free to proceed hog wild, and thus permit speculation to force up commodity prices.

Mr. BRICKER. Is the Senator of the opinion that there is an influence on prices as a result of the operations of commodity exchanges?

Mr. GILLETTE. Definitely.

Mr. BRICKER. Then the Senator is of an opinion different from that of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, which says there is no effect on the prices of commodities as a result of such trading or operations.

Mr. GILLETTE. When was that report issued?

Mr. BRICKER. About 6 months ago.

Mr. GILLETTE. The situation has changed, and in the last 6 weeks prices have run wild.

Mr. BRICKER. What is the nature of the report of the Senator's committee?

Mr. GILLETTE. We have made parts of the report, which now is pending; and we are continuing our investigation.

Mr. BRICKER. Does not the Senator agree that we should have that information before we give a blanket endorsement to a proposal of this kind, when we do not know what it means? Should not we have that information before we provide a penalty of $5,000, by way of fine, for each violation of an order of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I wish it were possible to obtain the information. We are bending every effort to obtain it.

In the meantime, the only alternative is to leave the matter wide open and permit these persons to run away with the situation.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I am not in favor of leaving the situation wide open, but I think we should have before us first the facts bearing on the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, is the pending question on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. To the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Ohio has offered an amendment to strike out the penalty provision.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.]

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 29, in line 13, after "SEC. 101", it is proposed to insert "(a)"; and on page 29, after line 24, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(b) Except as provided in section 403, the authority conferred upon the President under this section shall be exercised by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is a very simple one; but if we are to profit by the mistakes we made in the last war, I submit that its adoption is of vital importance. The amendment provides in substance that the exercise of the authority under section 101, title I, of the pending bill, entitled "Priorities and Allocations," be conferred upon the Secretary of Commerce, with the exception of consumer rationing, which is dealt with separately in the bill under section 403.

During the rearmament period which preceded the last war, our efforts to prepare ourselves were seriously hampered by the dispersion among several agencies of authority for the control and production of scarce materials. Many of these agencies were new and inexperienced. Their functions were not clearly delineated. As a result of interagency rivalries and conflicting policies, it was necessary time after time for the President to issue new reorganizing executive orders. To bring order out of chaos, agencies were succeeded by super-agencies, and in turn by ultra-super-agencies.

The pending bill keeps priorities and allocations in one package in the Government. We cannot separate priorities and allocations and still have a good job done. However, more than that, we should keep both of them together and should keep the entire matter in one agency of Government. That is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am sorry that I do not now have time to yield. I wish to complete my statement before I yield. After I have completed my statement, perhaps I shall have time to yield to Senators who wish to ask questions.

Mr. President, unless we are prepared to resign ourselves to a sad repetition of that period of administrative confusion, the Senate should see to it today that the over-all authority relating to priorities and allocations is exercised through one agency, and, in particular, an agency which already is an established executive department of the Government, with sufficient facilities and staff to be able to do the job.

I should like to emphasize that the problems of priorities and allocations are intertwined and interdependent. They are Siamese twins, and they should not be separated. Performance depends, of course, on the ability to procure the necessary materials. Allocations are exercised efficiently only when the materials are distributed to those who need them to fill the orders which have been given preference in the interest of national defense. We cannot afford to have these two functions working at cross-purposes. It is futile for one agency to require a person to accept and carry out and perform a preference order when he may be denied, through the action of another agency, the very means of fulfilling it. There can be no dispute on this point.

Moreover, the problem of allocation in itself requires the utmost coordination of materials and facilities. The nature of the materials is not the basic test for conferring the authority. I say this without any reflection on other agencies. What I am trying to say is that we cannot afford to have the questions of distribution of materials determined by two or more different agencies, with no one agency to determine the inevitable conflict of demands. Our experience from World War II has shown that it is no solution to form one super-agency over another to resolve these conflicts. Such establishments serve only to interpose one more layer of insulation between promise and fulfillment, in the hope that somewhere along the line the contestants will get tired and drop out. And in the meantime everybody is kept waiting.

We should keep in mind that the Department of Commerce has all the facilities and know-how for handling this authority. It is a going concern. The Department took over the residual functions of the War Production Board and the OPA and it performed them well. In so doing, it built up a vast reservoir of valuable experience. Remember, also, that the Department administered the voluntary cooperation program of allocations under Public Law 395 of the Eightieth Congress. The Department has a fine and efficient Office of Industry and Commerce; it is experienced in controls. For years it has had the responsibility for export controls. Through its Census Bureau it is enabled to gather important statistics and other data in a minimum space of time; and its Office of Business Economics keeps in close and constant touch with all segments of industry. The Department of Commerce is an integrated, informed, and well-coordinated agency.

Let me not be misunderstood. I realize only too well the needs of agriculture, of industry, of the military and civilian portions of our Nation. I want them to have all the materials necessary for their existence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of my remarks may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the remainder of the statement of Senator JOHNSON of Colorado was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

But I do not want to have our boys in Korea shot at by tanks, exposed to heavy artillery fire, and be unable to answer in kind. I don't want to see our tanks and trucks in Korea held up because the fuel they need is being unnecessarily used in civilian automobiles, or in pleasure trains. I don't want to see our boys lack guns and ammunition and explosives because the steel or grain that should have been used for these materials has been absorbed for building race tracks and other emporiums of pleasure and to provide cold storage for the hoarders of scarce goods.

I know there will be those who say that we should give the President the over-all authority and let him, in his discretion, parcel it out. I admire and respect the President and I want him to get every authority necessary to help our country. But I realize at the same time, that he is only human, and that he cannot give his personal attention to these things.

Congress should take upon itself the responsibility of channeling this authority through one agency. I think we must do it in an unequivocal manner. I know very well that the moment this bill is passed, the President will be deluged with pressing requests from patriotic agencies with good intentions for consideration in the handling of the allocations program. And I also know that the line of least resistance will be to divide this authority among two or more agencies. In normal times, this would be proper, but these are not normal times. Until this present crisis at least has passed, we live in a state of dire emergency.

If we agree that this authority should be handled by one agency, why not say so in the bill? After all, we have done a similar thing in section 708 (b) which provides that the authority to waive antitrust laws relating to allocations may be delegated by the President to but a single official. I repeat that the one agency to be entrusted with priorities and allocations should be the Department of Commerce. I know of no other one Department which in the performance of its official functions is so close to all segments of industry, small business, labor, and agriculture, I know of no other one Department which can correlate and reconcile all the conflicting demands and claims that will inevitably arise under this section of the bill.

To all intents and purposes, the Department was the War Production Board during the transition period. It has the staff, the facilities, and the experience. I cannot urge too strongly that this Congress should say in plain language that it wants the priorities and allocation authority vested in the Department of Commerce. That will settle all doubts and it will better enable the President to exercise the authority conferred upon him in the bill.

This is a matter over and above personalities, but I do want to say that the Secretary of Commerce, Charles Sawyer, has amply demonstrated his ability to handle this complex authority. But beyond this is the overriding principle of coordination and one head. I do not want to see the priorities and allocations program bog down into a series of interdepartmental skirmishes. There is only one real place for fighting now, and that in Korea, where our boys are defending themselves, and us, from a worldwide menace. It is not enough that the Congress is united against aggression; we must make certain that the powers conferred upon the executive branch to defend ourselves are also united. I earnestly and sincerely urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment would require the priority and allocation authority to be exercised by the Secretary of Commerce.

The President may delegate this authority to the Secretary of Commerce under the bill, and I certainly would have no objection to Secretary Sawyer administering substantially all of these controls. However, the President should be the authority responsible for directing the administration of these controls to the best interests of the national defense; and if, in the light of all of the circumstances and the purposes to be accomplished, it appears to him that any other agency would be a more suitable agency to administer a particular control, I think he should be free to use that agency. I do not think we should restrict the President from selecting in any case the very best agency possible. I will therefore have to object to this amendment.

I want it definitely understood that in doing so I would have no personal objection to the delegation of this authority to Mr. Sawyer. As a matter of fact I would expect, and I suppose that most members of the committee would expect, that a large part of these controls would be handled by Mr. Sawyer, who was one of our principal witnesses. My objection goes to the question of leaving the President with flexible authority so that if he felt it necessary in the interest of national defense that any particular type of allocation or priority authority should be delegated to some other agency in the Government he would be perfectly free to make the delegation to that agency.

In other words, this amendment would direct the President of the United States to turn over to the Secretary of Commerce all questions regarding allocations and priorities of agricultural commodities.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of Commerce testified before our committee that he expected to handle the voluntary allocations of steel?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. His department is the Department which is specifically charged with the duty of looking out for the little fellow in this war effort, to see that the little fellow gets a fair break, is it not?

Mr. MAYBANK. I am in thorough accord with the Senator from Virginia. I know that he expects that steel and other commodities would be turned over to the Secretary of Commerce. But, I may ask, how about something that concerns the armed services.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Secretary of Agriculture wants to allocate all the steel that the Department may use. The Secretary of Commerce wants to allocate the steel for oil pipelines and gas pipelines and many other things pertaining to the interior. Does the Senator think that if this were divided up among the departments the steel people would know to whom to go, or that the little fellow who wanted a fair break in regard to allocations would get the consideration to which he was entitled?

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the Senator that is begging the question. In my statement I distinctly referred to steel. That should not be an issue in connection with the amendment. The Senator from Colorado has discussed the application of the amendment to the Department of Commerce, the Interior Department, REA, and all the others.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the Senator agree with me that there are two theories as to how the controls shall be administered; one theory being to have them operated through existing departments, the other, that there is a possibility that it may be necessary to create a new agency, such as a new War Production Board, to control all these matters? Would not the amendment of the Senator from Colorado compel the President to use existing departments?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; to use the Secretary of Commerce only.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May not the situation be sufficiently serious that it will be necessary to establish a new board, with more vigorous personnel brought in from the outside, to manage it?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado would prevent that from being done, would it not?

Mr. MAYBANK. I have not thought of it from that standpoint. I have thought of it from the standpoint of the Secretary of Commerce exercising all the controls. I am in favor of the Secretary of Commerce exercising the controls on steel. He has exercised such controls and has done a wonderful job. I do not see why we should tie the President's hands by saying that, if it is necessary to allocate wool, or something else about which Senators are concerned, the Secretary of Commerce shall do it. The Secretary of Agriculture might do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. With the exception of consumer rationing——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. TAFT and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, may I have but one second in order that I may correct a misstatement which has been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator that, according to Senate time, we are unable to measure seconds. But is there objection to permitting the Senator from Colorado to address a question to the chairman of the committee? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. This amendment does not deal with consumer rationing, which is dealt with separately in the pending bill under section 403; is not that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I never suggested consumer rationing. I said priorities and allocations. In connection with certain allocations, it might be that the Secretary of Agriculture would possess knowledge which the Secretary of Commerce did not possess. We might have to allocate cotton or oil or other things of that sort. I do not think the Senator means that Secretary Sawyer should do all of that. His office, Department of Commerce, is not set up to do it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield, if I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from South Carolina may yield to the Senator from Illinois for a question.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Has not all the time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The regular order has been demanded. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hoey	Millikin
Anderson	Holland	Morse
Benton	Humphrey	Mundt
Brewster	Hunt	Murray
Bricker	Ives	Myers

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 2 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] also have 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, each side is granted 2 minutes.

The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Senate will not adopt this amendment. If the Senate of the United States desires to put the Secretary of Commerce over the President of the United States, it can be done with this amendment. We are looking into the future. No one knows what is going to happen. The Korean situation is improved at the present time. No one knows what may happen tomorrow, but certainly the President of the United States should not be tied down with an amendment of this kind which tells him that everything in the way of allocation in connection with the control bill must come under the authority of the Secretary of Commerce. Surely the Senate of the United States will not adopt this kind of an amendment. Surely the Senate will give to the President a framework which is flexible. We are giving to the President much more than he has asked for. If we are going to give him stand-by controls, something which he did not ask for in the beginning, the Senate certainly should not tie his hands to the point where he will not be able to determine what agency of Government ought to handle this or that situation.

It seems to me, Mr. President, we shall be doing a foolish thing if we adopt this amendment, not knowing what the future may bring forth. Let us leave it to the President of the United States. It may be that he will never have to use these stand-by controls. I certainly hope he will never have to use them. But if we are going to lodge all this power in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce, we are going to give the Secretary of Commerce more power than we are giving to the President of the United States.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, there must be two tests before this amendment becomes effective. First, goods must be scarce; second, they must be strategic goods.

The object of the amendment is to put in one place priorities and allocations, as they should be, instead of having them scattered all over the lot. The Senator from Illinois has said that we do not know what is in the future. That is the reason we have proposed this amendment. When the time comes when we shall create a War Production Board, we shall not have to reach out into half a dozen different agencies and pick up the things which should all be in one place. We should not separate priorities and allocations; they should be kept together. The whole thing should be kept together.

As for giving the Secretary of Commerce more power than we grant to the President, that argument is positively ridiculous. Suppose we create a War Production Board and Congress tells that Board what it can and cannot do: Would we then be giving the War Production Board greater power than we are giving the President? Of course not.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. This amendment applies only to one section dealing with allocations and priorities, does it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. It does not deal with prices or wage control or any other things under the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It specifically eliminates section 403 and provides that the authority conferred under that section shall be exercised by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. TAFT. It refers only to the power conferred under that section.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not also true that the Secretary of Commerce operated these powers before, and is familiar with the machinery of allocations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And that includes priorities?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is detained on official business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "yea," and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—47

Aiken	Gurney	Mundt
Brewster	Hendrickson	Robertson
Bricker	Hickenlooper	Russell

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. MYERS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado moves that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered. The Senator from Nebraska moves that that motion be laid on the table.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Nebraska has made no such motion.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; I did.

Mr. LUCAS. Was the Senator from Nebraska recognized?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. The Chair recognized the Senator from Colorado, and the Senator made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] and I were on our feet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Three or four Senators were on their feet at the same time.

Mr. MYERS. Is the motion debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to reconsider is debatable, with 5 minutes allotted to each side.

Mr. WHERRY. I thought the Chair had recognized me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did recognize the Senator. However there seems to be some controversy, and although the Senator moved to lay the motion on the table, the Chair thinks in fairness to all, since only 5 minutes of debate is allowed on each side, the Chair ought to recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the effect of the amendment to which the Senate has just agreed, from a member of the Comittee on Banking and Currency, and I will ask the Senator from Alabama if he will explain the effect of the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Alabama for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I believe this is perhaps the most far-reaching amendment that has been offered to the bill. I believe that undoubtedly some Senators voted for it without realizing the extent to which it went to the heart of the bill. The effect of the amendment is to give all power over priorities and allocations to the Secretary of Commerce.

Let us see what some of those priorities and allocations might be. Most of the time they have been with reference to steel, but steel is only one item. It is possible that electric power will have to be allocated. It is possible that someone will have to say how much power the rural-electric cooperatives will get. The amendment would turn it over to the Department of Commerce to decide that question, instead of the department which, under the law passed by the Congress, has the right to distribute electric power generated at Government-built dams, namely, the Department of the Interior.

The amendment would turn over to the Secretary of Commerce the right to establish priorities; and listen to what that means. Suppose the Secretary of Defense decides that certain war plants ought to be built, and that a system of priorities ought to be provided as among those war plants. The amendment would give to the Secretary of Commerce the right to override the Secretary of Defense and say what the priorities shall be.

I heard members of the Committee on Armed Services vote for the amendment. I could not believe they knew what they were taking away from the Secretary of Defense, namely, the right to say what materials and equipment of war should go to one plant or another, taking away from the Secretary of Defense the right to channel goods to one particular airplane plant, and, instead, delegating that authority to the Secretary of Commerce, who knows nothing about it, and has no reason to know.

During the war we built the atomic plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn., the Manhattan project, one of the great programs of power allocation we had during the war, and the power was used in allocating top priorities to the Manhattan project. Who did it? It was done under the direction of the officials who had charge of building that plant, and not the Secretary of Commerce. The amendment would give to the Secretary of Commerce the power to make priorities and to make allocations.

It did become necessary during the war to allocate electric power. Under the amendment the Secretary of Commerce, who has no connection whatsoever with the distribution of power, according to an act of Congress, would be called upon to say what areas should "brown out," what industries, what defense industries, what war plants, the various plants under the direct supervision of the Secretary of Defense, should or should not be able to get power, and whether or not the rural cooperatives in the communities of Members of this body should be able to get power. According to the amendment, that would be under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, and taken out of the hands of those to whom we have previously given the responsibility.

Under the bill as it is written, the President has the right and the power to call upon anyone he desires to call upon, any agency he wants to call upon, to utilize the existing agencies, or to create, if necessary, a new agency, to do the job. Here it is proposed that that power be taken away from him, and the amendment provides that one man in the Government, and one man alone, shall carry on this tremendous program of priorities and allocations, and that that man shall be the Secretary of Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WHERRY and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the mover of a motion is entitled to 5 minutes, and the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is entitled to 5 minutes. But the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] was recognized, and yielded his time to the Senator from Alabama. The Chair feels that the only time left is the time allotted to the mover of the motion. and recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, as I stated before, the amendment deals only with materials which are, first, scarce, and, second, are strategic. The Senator from Alabama has recited what happened in World War II. We had a War Production Board at that time to do the allocating, and to handle the functions which are given to the Secretary of Commerce, in part, in the amendment I have offered. Did any great disaster happen to the country because the power was placed under the War Production Board?

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will yield, was not the allocation of power, as well as everything else, under the War Production Board?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Exactly.

Mr. TAFT. If we do not have it in one person, the man who has to build a plant will have to go to one department for priority for power, to another for steel, to another for wool, perhaps.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The very purpose of the amendment is to keep all these things together, to keep the tail with the hide, if you please, to keep them all in one place, so that when and if a War Production Board is created, those interested can go there and get their priorities in one parcel and in one package.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not true that if the war effort reaches the proportions suggested by the distinguished Senator from Alabama, we will then have price controls, wage controls, and rationing, and go from under this section to section 403, and that the amendment specifically says it shall not apply to section 403, which relates to a situation in which we have all-out mobilization, with price-fixing and wage controls?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. Section 403 is specifically exempted from my amendment by the amendment itself.

Mr. President, I do not agree that the Secretary of Commerce is an enemy. One would think it was Joe Stalin we were talking about. Th amendment proposes to keep priorities and allocations together in one piece, and put them in one department. Perhaps we could have put them in some other department, but the Department of Commerce, as I said in my opening statement, is naturally in charge of this sort of thing, so it was placed in that Department.

I assure any Senators who think otherwise that the Secretary of Commerce is not an enemy of this country. He is a patriotic member of the President's Cabinet, and I feel very certain that if the President knew about this amendment he would be for it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I can tell the Senator now that the President of the United States is not for the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Has he told the Senator he is not for it?

Mr. LUCAS. I am telling the Senator he is not for this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I was told today that the President was for this amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. The President of the United States is not for this amendment. It is a serious amendment, and what I cannot understand is why the Senator from Colorado believes that the Secretary of Commerce is in a better position to make a determination of the question of allocations and priorities than is the President of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think Congress still has some rights. Congress is writing this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly Congress has rights, but the President of the United States is to execute the bill, and he should have some rights, too, instead of having his hands tied and the Secretary of Commerce put over the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. This is a matter of execution. Congress is writing the law, and if Congress has to write the law, Congress should state in the law just where the tremendous powers the Senators have talked about are placed, and where they are to be handled, instead of having them distributed all over the Government, in half a dozen places, as has been suggested by those who are opposing the amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Would not the Senator agree that the statement that this puts the Secretary of Commerce over the President has no validity whatever, because the President of the United States, if he were not satisfied with the action being taken, could change the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, it has no validity at all.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I want time in my own right. I should like to be recognized to make a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are 10 seconds left.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator from Colorado yield the 10 seconds to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to yield to the Senator. A motion that is privileged can be made. It cannot be debated, however.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to move——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not recognized the Senator. The Chair wishes to apologize to the Senate for a mistake he made a while ago.

The Senator from Pennsylvania was not entitled to recognition under the unanimous-consent agreement. The Senator from Colorado was entitled to 5 minutes as the mover of the motion to reconsider, and the Senator from South Carolina, as chairman of the committee, was entitled to 5 minutes on the other side. The Chair made a mistake in recognizing the Senator from Pennsylvania. The time on a motion is controlled just as it is on an amendment. The Chair is very sorry he made the mistake and apologizes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish to present a parliamentary inquiry based on a hypothetical case. Let us assume the mover of the motion refuses to take the 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He can yield the time to some other Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Assuming he does not yield the time to some other Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot substitute another Senator for the chairman of the committee, if the chairman refuses to use the time.

Mr. LUCAS. But do Senators in opposition have a right to 5 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under a strict interpretation of the agreement only the two Senators involved, the chairman of the committee, and the mover of the motion, are entitled to time.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MYERS. Is it possible to have the yeas and nays on the vote on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to table?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am asking for recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels that if the Senator from Nebraska, who has been on his feet seeking recognition, desires to be recognized to make a motion which is not debatable, he is entitled to be recognized.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been on his feet also.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not so long as has the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MYERS. Maybe not so long.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable, either way the vote is taken, so what is the difference?

Mr. WHERRY. I move that the motion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] be laid on the table.

Mr. MYERS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that those who favor tabling the motion to reconsider will vote "yea." Those who are opposed to tabling will vote "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is unavoidably detained on official business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "yea," and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. WHERRY's motion to lay on the table the motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment E, and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 35, in line 13, it is proposed to change the period at the end of the line to a colon, and add the following proviso: "Provided, That in the consideration of any loan in the amount of or exceeding $100,000, the lending, participating or guaranteeing agency shall consult with and be advised by the Federal Reserve Board."

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, one of the important functions of this entire bill relating to priorities and allocations——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, let me inquire what amendment the Senator is discussing.

Mr. BRICKER. It is my amendment lettered "E," and it would require consultation and advice on the part of the Federal Reserve Board before a Government loan in excess of $100,000 is made under the provisions of this bill.

I was about to say that one of the principal purposes of the bill which provides for stepped-up production and Government priorities and control of production, is that there shall not be an extraordinary increase in prices; in other words, that there will not be price inflation.

Mr. President, the most inflationary money which I think can be spent at the present time is Government money. A balancing of the government's budget will go further toward preventing inflation than anything else which could occur.

The Federal Reserve Board already has tremendous power over the credit of the country, through the regulatory functions of the Board, especially as applied to the control of credit and controls of other kinds and characters.

This amendment provides for control over installment credit and control over real estate credit, insofar as the latter concerns new construction. In order to give the Federal Reserve Board complete control or in order to provide complete recognition of its authority in the field of inflation, I think we should include a requirement that the Federal Reserve Board shall be consulted and its advice shall be obtained in the case of all Government loans in excess of $100,000. I think such a provision is entirely proper. It would be practical, and I think it would help effectuate one of the fundamental purposes of the bill, namely, the control of inflation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The chairman of the committee is temporarily out of the Chamber, and he has asked me to substitute for him at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Ohio has explained, his amendment would require consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, prior to the making of any production loan in excess of $100,000 under section 302.

So far as the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board is concerned, I think everyone will agree that throughout this bill we have made provision quite freely for using the services of the Board.

This amendment would place upon the Board an additional responsibility, and would mean that after the agency primarily concerned with the loan had considered the matter and had determined that the loan was necessary in connection with the national defense, the loan would have to be delayed until the Federal Reserve Board, which already has many duties to perform under this bill, could become acquainted with the facts and could make its recommendation.

Thus, the amendment would cause unnecessary delay in connection with essential defense projects, and would require duplication of effort, without commensurate increase in protection to the Government.

The matter received some discussion in the committee. I do not remember that the exact amount was named; but I have had some discussion in regard to whether or not the Federal Reserve Board should be called upon to pass upon these loans. It was the feeling of a majority of the committee that such a provision would slow down the entire program, and that the agency directly concerned with the loaning activity is the one which should pass upon the loans.

For that reason, the committee voted against giving this power to the Federal Reserve Board.

I regret that the Senator from Ohio has offered the amendment at this time. I wish he would not insist upon offering it.

However, inasmuch as he does offer it, I express the hope that the amendment will be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, have I any time left?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, at this time I reserve any time remaining to me.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, the argument the Senator from Alabama is using in regard to this amendment—namely, that it would delay the program—is one which might well have been used, and he might well have accepted it, in regard to the proposal reuiring consultation with the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General before there is action under the antitrust laws. I argued that that function belongs to the Attorney General and that in that connection there should not be a provision reuiring consultation with the Federal Trade Commission.

In this field the Federal Reserve Board is primarily charged with jurisdiction over matters pertaining to inflation and credit. It should have control over the spending of Government money, which is the most inflationary money which can be spent. Under present conditions, such money would amount to some billions of dollars.

Therefore, the Federal Reserve Board should at least have some responsibility in connection with this matter and at least should be advised with and consulted before such a loan is made by the Government.

Mr. President, I think we have a right to submit the amendment. I am not going to withdraw it, and I think we should have a vote on it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has 3½ minutes, if he wishes to use them.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in view of the statement previously made when the Chair inadvertently overlooked me and recognized the Senator from Pennsylvania, I simply wish to state that I have no quarrel with the Chair on that account.

A moment ago I was on the telephone. I wish to state that the President of the United States told me that he hoped the bill, including sections 1, 2, and 3, which he originally recommended and submitted to us, would be passed in the form in which it was sent to us.

There have been consultations for weeks with the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Sawyer, and with Chairman Symington. Mr. Sawyer never asked for the power the Senate voted him, although, of course, the Senate has the privilege of voting to have him use such power; but the President of the United States himself would not be a party to that provision.

Although I have the greatest respect for the distinguished Senator from Colorado, I wish to make clear, in connection with the consideration of the amendment he has submitted, that neither the President nor Mr. Sawyer want any such provision included in this bill, for such a provision would hamstring the operations under the act.

The Senator has said that he spoke to the President; but I wish to say that I, also, have spoken to the President.

I know that Senators desire to write many provisions into this bill. I have had to oppose many of the suggestions which have been made.

Mr. President, no one has any greater affection for the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] than have I; but in my judgment, if we provide a limit of $100,000 in this connection, such a provision will interfere with everything the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] have had included in the bill, particularly in connection with the production of taconite and other commodities.

I am sure that any provision requiring consultation with the Federal Reserve Board in the case of loans in excess of $100,000, loans coming out of the $2,000,000,000, would be a bad provision. Therefore, I oppose the amendment requiring consultation with the Federal Reserve Board in regard to such loans. Such a provision would interfere with and delay operations under the bill.

Mr. BRICKER. The amendment covers direct loans.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course; in the case of the matter to which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] and his colleague, Mr. THYE, have referred, direct loans in the case of the production of taconite would be covered. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has an amendment which also would be affected.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it appears to me that the functions of the Federal Reserve Board are in regard to broad areas of policy, not in connection with matters of specific detail.

This particular amendment will, as the chairman of the committee has so well stated, place on the Federal Reserve Board the duty of going into infinite detail, and such an amendment could hold up the processes of development and expansion which would be needed in very critical areas.

As the Senator from South Carolina has stated, the development of the production of critical materials, such as taconite, which is covered under the amendment my colleague and myself have placed before the committee, could be most adversely affected. This amendment, if adopted, would cause a great deal of delay in that connection and would place upon the Federal Reserve Board a duty which I think it is not set up to handle.

Of course, it is proper for the Federal Reserve Board to have jurisdiction over the broad areas of Government credit control and finance control; but the amendment now before us relates to a different kind of lending problem, one which is beyond the active workings of the Federal Reserve Board.

Therefore I think the amendment should be rejected.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish to say that I think he is quite correct in saying that the Federal Reserve Board is not equipped to pass on individual loans at the present time, whereas it is equipped to handle matters of policy, to which I shall refer later in connection with an amendment of my own.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill already contains a provision in regard to power or control in the mortgage field. That field is within the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board, and it is able to handle that matter, but not the matter covered by this amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I agree entirely with the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. [Putting the question.]

The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAFT. I offer an amendment. It is my amendment Y, slightly amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 36, it is proposed to strike out lines 20 to 25 and on page 37, lines 1 to 20, and insert the following:

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of section 303, and pending the making of such appropriations, any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized subject to the approval of the President to borrow from the Treasury of the United States such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title, provided that the total amount so borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $100,000,000 at any one time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for a brief statement?

Mr. TAFT. I ask unanimous consent that, without losing time, I may permit the Senator from Michigan to make a brief statement withdrawing an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may withdraw the subversives-control amendment offered by me and Senator MUNDT, of South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair advises the Senator from Michigan that it is unnecessary to do that, since the amendment has never been offered, but has merely been ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I should like to make this statement: After a conference with the senior Senator from Nevada I ask permission for myself and on behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] to withdraw and not to propose or ask to be voted upon, as an amendment, the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill. It has been agreed that the Senator from Nevada will accept certain amendments to his bill which substitutes the identical language of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, and, therefore, there will be a vote, under the agreement of the senior Senator from Illinois, upon that particular bill (S. 2311). The sponsors of the amendment are satisfied with that agreement. It was the desire of the sponsors of S. 2311, the subversives-control bill, to have an early vote on that bill. This procedure will now assure such a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan announces that the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill will not be offered as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for about a minute, that I may make a brief statement in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TAFT. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Nevada, without having the time charged to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the situation is simply this: In drafting my bill (S. 4037) I made certain changes in the language of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, primarily for the purpose of integrating the provisions of that bill with the provisions of other measures which were included. My purpose was not to weaken or change in any material respect the provisions of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, but to carry them forward into the omnibus measure.

In two or three respects the Senators whose names appear on the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill have expressed the desire that changes which I made should be eliminated so as to conform the language of my bill precisely to the language of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill. Since my objective, with respect to those provisions of my bill which were, as I have openly asserted, taken from the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, has been the same objective as that of the Senators whose names appear on the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, I have been happy to agree to accept the proposed amendments when my bill comes up in the Senate.

Let me stress the fact that none of these proposed amendments will in any way weaken the bill, and that the net effect of these amendments will be to have my omnibus bill include the text of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, more precisely in conformity with the text of that bill as it was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and as it now stands on the Senate Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to state that, once an amendment is offered to the pending bill, the question of accepting it is one for the Senate. However, a Senator may modify his own amendment, without unanimous consent. If it is a question of agreeing to an amendment which is not a part of the bill, it would have to be acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, for the same purpose, I may yield to the Senator from South Dakota, without having the time charged to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I simply want to express my appreciation to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for working, along with the Senator from Michigan, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] and myself, to effect this agreement, whereby, under the schedule announced by the majority leader today, the Senate will have an opportunity to vote on the provisions of Senate bill 2311, precisely as they will now be included as title 1 of S. 4037. We all believe that this will be a better arrangement than to try to limit debate to 5 minutes to each side on a measure so important as subversive activity control legislation. I am completely satisfied with the agreement that has been effected.

Under terms of the agreement just reached with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. McCARRAN] the exact text of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill is to be substituted for the language in title 1 of S. 4037. Thus the Senate is now assured of an opportunity to vote on the provisions of S. 2311 as part of that omnibus security bill and there no longer is reason to insist upon a vote today on our amendment which would have added it to the pending measure. It is with this understanding that we are now withdrawing our amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, one of the most extreme powers given in this bill is that which permits the President, under section 303, to go into any business he chooses, and to borrow up to $2,000,000,000 to support such business. Personally I questioned whether it was necessary, whether we should not specify the particular things the Government itself might go into. Personally it seemed to me there were enough private facilities available to manufacture what might be required. It is claimed, however, that, as was the case in World War II in connection with the building of synthetic rubber plants, there may be things which the Government must do. So, while I am not suggesting that we change this power, nevertheless it is an extreme power. It seems to me that it ought to be not the subject of borrowing by the President up to $2,000,000,000, but it ought to be the subject of appropriation. So, the amendment which I offer, amendment Y, in which a typographical error occurred in the printing and which has been corrected, provides:

> There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of section 303—

There is no limitation which Congress may appropriate—> and pending the making of such appropriations, any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized subject to the approval of the President to borrow from the Treasury of the United States such sums of money as may be necessary—

Which shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 at any one time. That is the provision which we placed in certain acts such as the ECA, in order that there may be no delay while the Senate or the Congress is considering the appropriation.

That seems to be a reasonable provision. I cannot understand why this tremendous power should be given. As written, and once the bill is passed, the President may spend $2,000,000,000 for any purpose, on anything he wants, without ever coming back to Congress. He is authorized to borrow it from the Secretary of the Treasury. The Treasury is authorized to purchase the obligations and to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds of the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Loan Act. It seems to me that the $2,000,000,000, assuming that it is necessary to have it, certainly ought to be subject to appropriation by Congress. My amendment is not a cutting down, I say say, of the $2,000,000,000 to $100,000,000. It simply puts in that convenient provision which has been in the ECA and other acts, in order that the delay in the appropriation may not completely stop the process.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there should be no reasonable objection to the amendment. It gives authority for Congress to appropriate any amount it sees fit to appropriate, but the agency will have to come to Congress to present its projects. If huge projects requiring $30,000,000,000 are required for the Army, and that matter is subject to appropriation, why not the $2,000,000,000 required for the construction of plants?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, we have given consideration to the amendment. I know that my colleague and friend from Ohio will agree that the amendment changes the method of obtaining funds for the lending and procurement activities under sections 302 and 303.

Under the bill as reported the agencies which would act under these sections would be authorized to borrow up to $2,000,000,000 from the Treasury for these purposes. No appropriations would be required.

Under the amendment, no special provision would be made for loans under section 302, and these could presumably be made only out of moneys hereafter appropriated for the purpose. The amendment would also require the general use of appropriated moneys for activities under section 303. However, a special $100,000,000 fund would be provided, to be borrowed from the Treasury, pending the making of appropriations.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have no objection to inserting section 302 to carry out the purposes of that section, and section 303, and, with the Senator's permission, I shall modify my amendment for that purpose. It was not an intentional omission.

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate the statement of the Senator.

Time is of the essence in the defense effort. We cannot afford to delay the start of increases in production and productive capacity until appropriations are granted, either in any amount under section 302 or, under section 303, for more than $100,000,000. To do so would only retard the defense effort and increase inflationary pressures during the period of delay.

I digress for a moment, Mr. President, to say that, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I appreciate that many Members on the other side of the aisle have done more than I have done to expedite the omnibus appropriation bill. But that bill is not here. Requests have not yet been heard in connection with the deficiency bill. It is almost the first of September. No one has a greater respect for the committee than I have, especially for its distinguished chairman. The conference on the bill has not yet been concluded, and I do not know how long it will take.

The public interest would be preserved through the activities of the special committee established under this bill. I count upon this committee to study the programs and to advise the Congress if the intention of the Congress is not being carried out.

For this reason, Mr. President, and because I am a member of the Appropriations Committee and have the deepest appreciation of the difficulties confronting the committee in its one-package bill, I am not certain that the amendment is a wise one.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does not the able Senator from South Carolina agree that when we are placing in the hands of the executive branch vast powers in the wartime emergency with which we are faced, the people expect Congress, at least, to keep control of the purse strings, and inasmuch as we are going to have an additional supplemental appropriation bill before us, why is not the administration in as competent a position to ask for what it can justify before the committee, instead of asking for a blank check which requires no legislative action whatever?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, that is a very good statement for the Senator from California to make, and I appreciate his sincerity and honesty in making it. He has asked me a double-barreled question in his statement. We have given the President the right to keep the boys in the Army for 1 year longer than the period for which they signed. We have given the Commander in Chief the right to call out the National Guard or any other organization, and we have given certain rights in all these matters. I hope the $2,000,000,000 can be scrutinized and carefully looked after, rather than to have to wait for the Senate and the House of Representatives to act. I say that with the deepest respect. I was not a supporter of the one-package appropriation bill. It takes forever to get through with it. We have passed joint resolutions extending appropriations from June 30 to July 31 and from July to August, and I am not at all certain that the appropriation bill will be finished in September, in spite of all the efforts of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to get it through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], as modified. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators asked for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the division, there is a tie vote, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has announced the result. The request of the Senator comes too late.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I wish to call up my amendment which is designated "8–17–50–H," and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 37, line 24, beginning with the word "tin," it is proposed to strike out through the first comma in line 1, on page 38.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, this amendment simply deletes the word "tin" in section 305. I suggest that deletion because only a few days ago, less than 10 days ago, we sent to the President, and he has signed, a bill providing for an extension of 5 years wherein the tin smelter plant will be under the jurisdiction of the RFC.

Mr. President, I do not think section 305, as a whole, has any proper place in this bill. This is a control bill; it is not a reorganization bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I agree with the statement made by the Senator. I was hoping that he would broaden his amendment to strike out the entire section as the Senator from Wyoming has stated, this is not a reorganization bill. There is a critical situation in rubber and tin. The rubber and tin production programs are being well administered at this time by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and there is no earthly reason for confusing the whole situation at this time by reorganizing and transferring these functions elsewhere.

I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to use some of my time, so that I shall not interfere with the Senator from Wyoming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will be entitled to recognition when the Senator from Wyoming has concluded.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Wyoming is agreeable to accepting the amendment to my amendment suggested by the Senator from Texas, if he cares to submit such an amendment. Does the Senator care to have my amendment so modified?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes; I should like to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming may modify his own amendment, if he so desires.

Mr. HUNT. I shall accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Are we now considering striking all of section 305?

Mr. HUNT. Yes. I am addressing myself particularly to the matter of tin. As I stated a short time ago it is no more than 10 days ago that we sent to the White House, and it is now an act, a bill providing for a 5-year extension for the tin smelter plant. We are all aware of the fact that by a voice vote we defeated Reorganization Plan No. 24, which would have done exactly what section 305 is designed to do. To the best of my knowledge the RFC is doing a splendid piece of work in connection with the tin smelter plant, and I can see no reason whatsoever for this section of the bill.

Mr. President, I think this section is a sort of meat ax approach to the matter, in an attempt to do by indirection what the Senate has refused to do directly only recently.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, has the Senator concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understand, perhaps a month ago or 3 weeks ago the Committee on Banking and Currency referred to the Committee on Armed Services a bill with respect to tin, which the Committee on Armed Services handled, and which the distinguished Senator from Ohio looked at before the bill was finally approved by the Senate. I understand it went to the President for signature.

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. That bill extended the period for 5 years.

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understand, there are certain other Government agencies and corporations which are under RFC. I appreciate that certain criticism has been directed against the RFC, but such criticism has nothing to do with the matter involved here. I am hopeful that the entire section will be stricken. I discussed the subject with the chairman of the RFC subcommittee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], and I think he will agree with me that rubber, tin, and the other materials should not be in the bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. This principle was proposed under Reorganization Plan No. 24. I understood the administration to be particularly interested in it, but I have no feeling about it. I think it would be quite agreeable to leave it where it is. Although I sponsored the amendment in committee, I do not think it important enough to have it stay in the bill. It grew out of Reorganization Plan No. 24. I assume there were worthy reasons for it, although I see no particular reason for objecting to its being taken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] modifies his amendment to provide for striking out section 305. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which my amendment "Y" was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to reconsider the vote by which the amendment he offered a short time ago was rejected.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will there be any debate on the motion to reconsider?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Five minutes is allowed to each side.

Mr. TAFT. There was one misunderstanding with regard to the amendment which I wish to correct. Many Senators thought that I was cutting the $2,000,000,000 to $100,000,000. That is not what the amendment proposes to do. It simply says that this particular spending of $2,000,000,000, or any amount of it, for the purpose of having the Government go into business to build, construct, and operate plants shall be subject to appropriations made by the Committee on Appropriations. There is no limitation provided in the amendment as to what the Committee on Appropriations may appropriate. They may appropriate any amount they wish to appropriate. The $100,000,000 figure simply relates to money which may be borrowed temporarily in case there is a delay in the Committee on Appropriations in making appropriations, as the Senator from South Carolina has indicated there may be. It seems to me that the Senate might well accept this amendment. There is no change in the general principle of control or the general principle involved in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to make one point clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has not yielded.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me perfectly clear that if the Committee on Appropriations can appropriate $30,000,000,000 for the armed services, it can appropriate $2,000,000,000 more for the purpose of enabling the Government to go into business. I can see no reason why a distinction should be made.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Unfortunately this year we had a single-package appropriation bill. Previously we had separate appropriation bills.

Mr. TAFT. If there is an emergency, Congress could act fast. We will get estimates. We have already received estimates from the President for $16,000,000,000 additional being required for military purposes. The committee would act in such a case, and both Houses would act, within 2 weeks from the time the President sent those estimates in. Why could we not do the same thing in this situation?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is it not a matter of Congress taking a look at what is going to be spent before it is spent?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct. I see no reason why we should exempt this particular sum from action by the Committee on Appropriations. That is what this section now does.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we would not only take a look at the authorization, but it would go through legislative committee which are set up for that very purpose. It would come to the Committee on Appropriations, where it rightfully should come. If this amendment is not adopted we would be bypassing the legislative committees which are set up for the purpose of considering appropriations.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator made the statement that his amendment would not cut the $2,000,000,000. The last three lines of his proposed amendment read:

Provided, That the total amount so borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $100,000,000 at any one time.

Mr. TAFT. Under the original bill it was all borrowed. There was no provision which would let it go to the Appropriations Committee. Once we pass the bill we never hear any more about it. The President can borrow and spend $2,000,000,000 without coming back to Congress. My amendment changes the whole theory. It says that Congress must appropriate for this section, just as it must appropriate for every other purpose or section. The $100,000,000 is provided so that if there is a delay in the appropriation, and an emergency exists, the President can borrow up to $100,000,000 to be repaid when the appropriation comes through. That is the only reason for providing the $100,000,000. The appropriation authority is unlimited. There is no limit on the appropriation authority, but we do retain in the Committee on Appropriations the right to say whether the Government may go ahead and construct the large synthetic-rubber program, or a large program for the manufacture of gasoline, airplanes, or some other program. It seems to me there should be such a check upon the Government before it goes into business. It is a very slight check.

Mr. MAYBANK. As the Senator from Ohio knows——

Mr. TAFT. I wonder if the Senator would not take the amendment to conference. It is really a matter of procedure more than anything else.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator's statement is absolutely accurate. We have already gotten together on section 203. I wonder if the Senator believes that $100,000,000, in the event that we are involved in a real emergency, is not a rather low figure.

Mr. TAFT. I would be willing to raise it to $250,000,000, or something in that neighborhood. This represents only what would be spent. It is hardly possible to spend $100,000,000 in a hurry. This is only money which would be spent while the Committee on Appropriations was acting on an emergency request.

Mr. MAYBANK. Why not make it $300,000,000?

Mr. TAFT. Three hundred million dollars. Very well.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no right to speak for anyone except myself.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I modify my amendment to strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to reconsider the vote by which his amendment "Y" was rejected.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I modify my amendment in accordance with my understanding with the Senator from South Carolina. I modify my amendment by striking out "$100,000,000", and inserting in lieu thereof "$300,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment as modified.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 36, it is proposed to strike out lines 20 to 25 and on page 37, lines 1 to 20 and insert the following:

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of section 303 and pending the making of such appropriations. Any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized subject to the approval of the President to borrow from the Treasury of the United States such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title, provided that the total amount so borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $300,000,000 as any one time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio state whether there has been agreement on the other amendment?

Mr. BRICKER. I shall not call up the amendment covering the same subject.

Mr. MAYBANK. The amendment, as amended, retains sections 302 and 303, does it not?

Mr. TAFT. Sections 302 and 303; yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I call up my amendment B.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, between lines 18 and 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

(k) No rule, regulation, order, or price schedule issued under this act shall require any seller of materials or property to limit, average, or apportion his sales among price ranges on the basis of any average or apportionment of sales made at any prior time.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to forbid what has been known as the maximum average pricing, or the so-called MAP, that was put into effect by the War Production Board and the OPA under the old law. This program requires each seller of merchandise to sell exactly the same amount or quantity of merchandise in each price range to each customer as the seller had done in the base period.

When this regulation was proposed under the OPA there was immediate protest all over the country. A House committee, under the chairmanship of Representative HOWARD W. SMITH of Virginia, held extensive hearings, and recommended that the pricing program be forbidden. Later a Senate committee also held hearings, as the result of which in the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress a bill was passed to prevent this program being put into effect.

Of course, the result of the proposal is very plain. Its effect can be illustrated by an example. In 1945 great numbers of white shirts accumulated in the hands of manufacturers. They were unable to sell the shirts and put them into channels of trade because they were unable to manufacture shirts of cheaper quality which would meet the necessities of the maximum average pricing.

It has been suggested that under the bill as drawn, maximum average pricing would be possible, and the purpose of the amendment is to restore to the bill the provision which was adopted by the Congress with respect to the old OPA law.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understood that the very able Senator from Missouri had reference to an old OPA law, as I talked with him once about the amendment. He did not tell me that, of course, but I checked, and I should like to state what the result would be. If the Senator differs with me, I should like to have him tell the Senate. One thing I do not think we can do on the Senate floor is to legislate OPA regulations into the bill. The Senator himself said that the amendment was an amendment against an OPA regulation.

Mr. KEM. No; I failed to make myself clear. I am asking the Senate to do exactly what the Senate and House did in the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress with reference to the previous OPA law. There is no difference at all. We passed this as a law once.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was a regulation.

Mr. KEM. No; it was a law, a law passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment would prevent the President from issuing a regulation which would prohibit a seller from shifting his average price line or from keeping the same proportion of sales in various price lines. For example, a seller might long have been selling shirts in the $2 to $5 range, perhaps a quarter of his sales being at each of the prices $2, $3, $4, and $5. It might be found advisable to prevent him prom shifting his buisness to the $5 line, abandoning the cheaper lines.

Such a shift would not be a direct violation of the price ceiling established on the $5 shirt, but the effect on the consumer would be much worse than an increase to $2.50 in the price of the $2 shirt.

Regulations of this sort could not, of course, require a person to sell if he did not want to. That is the complaint I have. Section 406 of the pending bill, I say to the distinguished Senator from Missouri, expressly prohibits any requirement of making a sale. But such regulations could prevent a person from so changing his line of business as to defeat the purpose of the bill.

In other words, Mr. President, the Senator's intention is absolutely commendable, and I admire his purpose, but from the legal standpoint, such regulations could prevent a person from so changing his line of business as to defeat the purposes of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator remember that this is the provision which caused us more difficulty in the OPA regulations than any other? A manufacturer of farm machinery would paint a stripe around a piece of material and put it into a wholly different category from that it was previously in. He was therefore permitted to go into all sorts of new price schedules. It was an amendment adopted at the time when we were nearing the end of OPA and were working out of regulation.

Mr. MAYBANK. The interpretation of it and the way it worked was what led to difficulties.

Mr. ANDERSON. It led to all sorts of difficulties all the way through, and would again.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina if it is not true that the regulation as put into effect by the OPA was found to be entirely unworkable, and if Congress did not intervene and pass a law to prevent the regulation being carried out, as the result of experience, careful investigation, and painstaking consideration of the whole situation?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is absolutely correct. Many of the orders issued by the OPA were unworkable. But it would be incumbent that those affected be consulted before any such regulations could be put into effect again. The Senator from New Mexico has explained the difficulties experienced, and he was at the head of the Department of Agriculture at the time, a Cabinet officer. I believe that what the Senate from Missouri desires to have done cannot be done. I know that merchants would put an extra stripe in a collar and change the brand, and, as the Senator from New Mexico suggested, farm machinery could be painted with a red line instead of a black line.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether when he was in the President's Cabinet he presented his view about this matter to the House committee and the Senate committee, which had extensive hearings on it, and, after careful consideration, decided that the maximum average pricing plan was not workable, and forbade it being used.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am sure that trying to handle this question by legislation certainly proved to be extremely difficult all the way through.

Mr. KEM. Did it not prove to be extremely difficult when the OPA undertook to make it work?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I think it was very difficult for everybody.

Mr. KEM. Is it not better to withdraw the matter from the realm of impossibility by taking it to conference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, while the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] is getting himself into place to speak, may I ask a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is in place.

Mr. THYE. To save time, may I ask a question of the able Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Colorado displace himself momentarily and yield for that purpose?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. THYE. The able Senator from South Carolina again has referred to a provision of the bill under which hearings must be held, at which interested parties can be heard before any regulation is imposed. My question of the Senator from South Carolina is: Is the provision to which he referred to be found on page 74, under section 709?

Mr. MAYBANK. That, I think, is one provision. There are several provisions.

Mr. THYE. There has been considerable question in the minds of many with respect to this provision. Some feel that it is so vague that the section could be put aside and not considered; that no hearings would be required under it on the part of the administrator at which the related industries could appear, before regulations would be imposed. My only reason for asking the question is in the attempt clearly to define whether the provision of the bill found on page 74 under section 709 is the provision with respect to which the Senator from South Carolina stated to the Senate that under a provision in the bill the administrator must hold hearings and permit the interested parties to be heard.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator has asked me a question which would take quite a little time to answer. I do not know whether the time is now being charged against the Senator from Colorado.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. He soon will have no time left.

Mr. MAYBANK. Three answers can be found to the question. I shall be glad to discuss the matter with the Senator from Minnesota when we may have 5 minutes of our own to do so, and not take the time of the Senator from Colorado now.

Mr. THYE. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment dated August 18, 1950, lettered "P" which I offer and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, unless some Senator wishes to hear the amendment read in full, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the amendment not be read, but that the amendment be printed in the RECORD in full at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has asked unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be waived and that the amendment be printed in the RECORD in full at this point. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN's amendment is as follows:

On page 32, between lines 16 and 17, insert "Subtitle A—General Expansion."

On page 35, line 23, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be without prejudice to, and shall be administered consistently with, subtitle B of this title."

On page 36, line 21, after the word "section", insert the following: "or pursuant to subtitle B of this title."

On page 38, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

"SUBTITLE B—METALS AND MINERALS

"SEC. 311. (a) It is the policy of the Congress that every effort be made to stimulate exploration for and conservation of strategic and critical metals and minerals and other essential metals and minerals by private enterprise to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the United States, and that every effort be made to encourage the development and maintenance of sources of these metals and minerals within the United States in order to decrease and prevent, wherever possible, a dangerous and costly dependence by the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of such materials. To this end it is the further policy of the Congress that every effort be made to maintain a sound and active mining industry within the United States; to expand exploration for those ores and other mineral substances which are essential to the common defense or the industrial needs of the United States; and to prevent the discontinuance of mine operations under such circumstances as to make it probable that production would not or could not be resumed when needed for the national economy or security.

"(b) In carrying out these policies small mining enterprises shall be encouraged to apply for aid under this subtitle, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Interior shall provide small mining enterprises with full information concerning this subtitle, and shall make special provision for expeditious handling of applications from small mining enterprises.

"SEC. 312. A Minerals Conservation Board, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby established. The Secretary of the Interior shall be the executive chairman of the Board. The members of the Board may delegate their powers, functions, and duties, including those relating to appeals, to suitable officers of their respective agencies.

"SEC. 313. To carry out the policy of this subtitle, the Board shall by regulation determine—

"(a) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of exploration, on the one hand, and to the aid of conservation, on the other hand;

"(b) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of exploration for any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, as specified by the Board;

"(c) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of conservation of any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, as specified by the Board;

"(d) the maximum price or the minimum price, or both, which may be paid for the purchase of any metal or mineral for conservation: Provided, That adequate allowance shall be made for depletion and depreciation in computing costs of operation or maintenance;

"(e) the maximum amount or the minimum amount, or both, which may be paid on account of participation in the costs of maintenance for conservation with respect to any metal or mineral;

"(f) the maximum amount or the minimum amount, or both, which may be paid to any producer or class of producers on account of exploration for any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, and the ratio which the Government's contribution for exploration shall bear to the contribution of any producer or class of producers for exploration;

"(g) the particular metals or minerals or ores thereof and specifications therefor that shall be eligible for aid for conservation;

"(h) the particular metals or minerals that shall be eligible for aid for exploration; and

"(i) the time limits or dates within which contracts for aid for conservation shall terminate.

"SEC. 314. (a) The Board shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out its functions and duties under this subtitle, and to provide fair and equitable treatment for all applicants for aid.

"(b) The Secretary, subject to the rules and regulations of the Board, may prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subtitle and which must be complied with by applicants for contracts under the provisions of this subtitle.

"(c) The Secretary may delegate any of his functions under this subtitle.

"(d) All rules and regulations issued under the authority contained in this section shall be published in the Federal Register.

"SEC. 315. (a) Any producer may file with the Secretary an application for financial aid in carrying out a specified project for exploration or financial aid to conserve a deposit of ores or minerals. An application to conserve may be either for aid by participating in the costs of maintaining the property in stand-by condition or by purchasing all or any part of the metals or minerals resulting from production from such deposit. The application and the project for aid disclosed by the application must conform to the express policy and provisions of this subtitle and with the rules and regulations of the Board and of the Secretary: Provided, however, That simple contracts covering exploration projects shall be awarded upon application to small base metal mines and such contracts shall provide for the payment by the United States of one-half of the total reasonable costs of all tunnels, shafts, winzes, and raises in such a mine if the application or examination discloses that there is a reasonable promise of developing unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals. All contracts covering exploration projects shall contain provisions for repayment to the United States of sums paid by the United States pursuant thereto, liability for such repayment to be limited to payment of a reasonable portion of profits accruing from production resulting from such exploration.

"(b) The Secretary shall cause qualified mining engineers, geologists, and any other necessary technicians to make examination of and to report on each application, and to certify it to the Secretary either for acceptance, as presented or subject to specified modifications, or for rejection. In the case of a project for exploration, the examining experts shall certify whether the project offers reasonable promise of discovering known or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals. In the case of a project for aid to conserve a deposit of ores or minerals, either by participating in the costs of maintaining the property in stand-by condition or by purchasing all or any part of the metals or minerals resulting from production from such deposit, the examining experts, considering economic and practical factors, shall certify whether the project offers reasonable promise of maintaining in stand-by condition or in production, as the case may be, a property the production from which would, in the absence of financial aid by the United States, be discontinued or remain discontinued under such circumstances as to make it probable that for economic or technical reasons such production would not or could not be resumed when needed for the national economy or security.

"(c) The Secretary shall either accept and approve the application, subject to any modification therein which he may require, or he shall reject it: Provided, That if the Secretary's action on the application conflicts with the recommendation and certification of the examining experts, he shall refer the application to the Board; and the Board shall either confirm and approve the action of the Secretary, or shall reverse it, or shall direct the Secretary to reconsider it. Confirmation or reversal of the Secretary's action by the Board shall be final, and direction to reconsider shall place the application in the same status it was in before action upon it by the Secretary. If the Secretary accepts the application, either in its original or modified form, the terms of the application and acceptance shall be merged in a formal, written contract. Any applicant who is dissatisfied with the decision of the Secretary upon his application, may at any time within 30 days after receipt of notice of the decision, unless further time is granted by the Board, appeal to the Board, and the Board, as expeditiously as possible, shall review the entire matter, make its findings thereon, and notify the applicant of its decision, which shall be final.

"(d) All metals or minerals purchased under the provisions of this section, or such equivalent quantities thereof as may be permitted by the contract with the producer, shall be delivered by the producer to and shall be received and paid for by the Administrator of General Services at such places and times as may be provided in the contract. The Administrator shall from time to time, and in any event before selling them in the open market, notify the Munitions Board of the inventory of metals or minerals held by him under the provisions of this subtitle and shall continue to hold all metals or minerals received by him under this subtitle until at least 60 days after he has given the Munitions Board notice that they are so held. The Munitions Board may, as long as any such metals or minerals are held by the Administrator, (1) direct the Administrator to transfer any of them to the national security stockpile in accordance with the provisions of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, as amended (53 Stat. 811, 60 Stat. 596), or (2) within 60 days after such notice from the Administrator direct him to hold any such metals or minerals listed in the notice until 60 days after the next succeeding appropriation for purchases for the stockpile has become available. Unless notified by the Munitions Board to either transfer any of such metals or minerals or to continue to hold them as provided in this subsection, the Administrator shall sell them in the open market if and when open-market prices will return to the Government at least the approximate average price paid by the Government for the metals or minerals, and only in such quantities as will not materially depress the market. No metal or mineral shall be transferred into the national security stockpile under the provisions of this subtitle unless the material has been found to be strategic and critical as provided in the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and meets established specifications as to quality and degree of refinement or processing, and unless such transfer is consistent with the current stockpiling procurement program of the Munitions Board. Any transfer of metals or minerals to the national security stockpile shall be covered by a transfer of funds from appropriations available for purchases for the stockpile to the Administrator in amounts approximating what the cost of the metals or minerals would have been if purchased in the open market at the time of transfer.

"(e) Contracts entered into under the provisions of this section may be entered into without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or other provisions of law prescribing the manner of making contracts on behalf of the United States.

"(f) No contracts shall be entered into under the provisions of this section for a period exceeding 2 years.

"SEC. 316. As used in this subtitle—

"(a) 'Secretary,' standing by itself, means the Secretary of the Interior.

"(b) 'Administrator' means the Administrator of General Services.

"(c) 'Board' means the Minerals Conservation Board.

"(d) 'Exploration' means exploration in the United States for unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals, including undeveloped extensions of known deposits, conducted from the surface or underground, by surface trenching, core or churn drilling, tunnels, raises, winzes, or shafts, including recognized and sound procedures for obtaining pertinent geological information, and including metallurgical research on processes for the production of such metals or minerals.

"(e) 'Production' means the production of ores or minerals from mines in the United States, or from tailings, dumps, slags, or residues of such mines, which the Secretary determines would, in the absence of financial aid by the United States, be discontinued or remain discontinued under such circumstances with respect to each particular mine as to make it probable that for economic or technical reasons such production would not or could not be resumed promptly when needed for the national economy or security.

"(f) 'Small base metal mines' means mines or deposits of ores primarily producing or which in the course of conducting an exploration project primarily produce lead, zinc, or copper ores, or ores containing a combination of such metals, the average aggregate monthly production of which does not exceed 100 tons of lead, zinc, and copper metal combined.

"(g) 'Producer' means any person or persons or legal entity by whom or for whose account and interest exploration, maintenance, or production is to be or is being performed.

"(h) 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense, means the United States and its Territories and possessions.

"SEC. 317. This subtitle shall not be construed as superseding or amending the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 755), as amended."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, may I speak for a moment in the time of the Senator from Colorado?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has not yet begun his statement.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Does the Senator from South Carolina wish to speak now before I have begun to present my case?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to make a statement.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator can do so on his own time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the proposed amendment, with the exception of minor changes to bring it within the structure of the bill, is in the exact language of Senate bill 2105, which passed this body after considerable debate on October 6, 1949, and which went to the House Committee on Public Lands, where it was approved with amendments. A vote in the House was blocked by the House Rules Committee. Efforts to override the Rules Committee and pass the bill required a two-thirds vote, which was not secured, although more than a majority of those voting favored such action.

Senate bill 2105, from which this amendment is taken, was worked out in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, the Bureau of the Budget, and with the Munitions Board. It was the best bill that could be worked out considering all the varying opinions on the subject.

Very briefly, the purpose of the amendment is Federal aid to decrease and prevent wherever possible a dangerous and costly dependence by the United States on foreign nations for supplies of strategic, critical, and essential metals and minerals.

To further this objective there is provision for a Mineral Conservation Board consisting of the Secretaries of Interior, Defense, Commerce, and Treasury, with the Secretary of Interior as Executive Chairman of the Board.

Two kinds of activity are contemplated—one to aid exploration and the development of new sources of such minerals in this country; the other to aid in the conservation of known mineral deposits in existing mines in this country and to make such deposits available when needed.

The Board is given appropriate powers for putting these programs into effect and for the disposition of the mineral supplies which may result.

By specific provision the terms of this amendment are integrated into the whole program for expansion of productive capacity and supply contained in title III of the pending bill.

The present language in section 303 having to do with the supply of minerals does not spell out specific and adequate programs for developing such supply or the maximum feasible amount thereof within the limits of the United States and that is the main reason for this amendment.

Let me emphasize that the President will not be hampered by the amendment in any efforts which he determines should be made to secure foreign supplies of strategic minerals, or domestic supplies thereof unaffected by the amendment. He is not hampered in any program he may establish for doing preclusive buying to keep foreign minerals out of enemy hands. The amendment strengthens the hand of the President as Commander in Chief of our military forces.

The Board and the President will determine the size and the cost of the program under the amendment, and the method of financing it will come under the other provisions of the pending bill either through the borrowing route provided in section 304 (b) or by appropriations authorized in section 711.

This amendment does not cripple or tend to cripple anything except our unsound dependence upon foreign strategic minerals. It fits within the general structure of the pending bill. It simply requires that among all the other choices of action open to the President under the bill, attention shall be given to exploration and development of our domestic mineral resources.

I wish time permitted me to discuss our stockpile situation, permitted me to develop the alarming scope of our dependence upon foreign minerals. I will simply remind the Senate of the facts of public record that this Nation is supplying only 74 percent of its copper consumption, 68 percent of its zinc production, 74 percent of our lead consumption; that practically speaking we are not producing in this country any tungsten, manganese, chrome, mercury, or a large number of other badly needed minerals.

A single well-placed bomb can destroy our principal foreign source of uranium. Submarines can destroy the carriers of the foreign strategic minerals on which we are dependent.

The passage last year of the bill from which this amendment is taken was a belated effort to plug a large loophole in our defenses. Adoption of the amendment at the present time is emergently and crucially needed.

Therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, there is no one who appreciates more than does the chairman of the committee the importance of the subject matter of the amendment. I have spoken about it to the distinguished Senator from Colorado and to Senators on this side of the aisle.

As the Senator from Colorado has said, the subject matter of the amendment was before us last year, and I voted in favor of it then. I understand that the bill on that subject is tied up in the House Rules Committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. However, I am fearful that adoption of the amendment as a part of the bill would precipitate in the conference a situation which would jeopardize the prompt enactment of the bill.

If the Senator from Colorado wishes to have me agree to take the amendment to conference, I shall be most happy to do so, although I call attention to the fact that the amendment covers the substance of a bill which we have already passed, but which is bottled up in the House Rules Committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I wish to say that this matter was handled under the leadership of the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. MAYBANK. Oh yes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I was glad to assist in that connection, insofar as I could.

The House committee approved the bill, but was unable to obtain a rule in regard to consideration of the bill by the House. A majority of the members of the committee favor enactment of the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Colorado has said, and I appreciate what the Senator from Wyoming has done in connection with this matter.

I shall not object if they wish to have the amendment accepted and taken to conference; but I should like to have it understood that in the conference I will not insist on inclusion of the amendment, because this subject is now before the House Rules Committee, in connection with another measure.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I am not making a gesture. I hope the distinguished chairman of the committee will give his strongest personal support to the amendment. It goes to a vital part of our defenses.

Mr. MAYBANK. I will, just as I did last year in regard to the other measure.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to call attention to the fact that we are short of antimony. Unless the amendment is adopted, we shall be faced with a very difficult situation; because in connection with the manufacture of steel, approximately 20 percent of the material used is antimony.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. This amendment contains many of the provisions which were in the act passed by the Congress during the last war, and which enabled us to obtain metals which helped in the winning of the war. So I think we should begin on this program now.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of adoption of the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment has expired. The Chair cannot recognize at this time a Senator unless he is yielded to by the Senator in charge of the time; and the Senator in charge of the time has not yielded.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I call up my amendment lettered "F," and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 59, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "Such regulations" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Such regulations may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, include provisions relating to any real estate construction credit extended, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended. Regulations issued under this section.

On page 62, it is proposed to strike out lines 12 to 19, inclusive.

COL. GEORGE W. COOMBS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], without having the time he uses charged against the time available to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Only 5 minutes can be used by any Senator in connection with any amendment.

The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to yield the floor temporarily to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. For 1 minute only.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that unanimous consent be given for this purpose, to permit the Senator from Maryland to proceed for 1 minute.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Maryland may proceed for 1 minute.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, while we are here today trying to preserve the best that civilization has produced, in the face of very threatening dangers, I should like to call attention to a circumstance which I think warrants a brief comment.

Col. George W. Coombs, of Kentucky, today is finishing his forty-second year on the staff of the Baltimore Sun. For 33 years continuously he has been a member of the Press Gallery, and for many years he has been treasurer of the National Press Club. He is getting along toward the sunset of life.

All of us know him very well. He is a gentleman, a scholar, and a fine American citizen.

I wish to pay to him, this brief tribute, which I am sure is shared by the large number of acquaintances and friends he has on Capitol Hill, and to wish him many years of happiness, good health, and contentment.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment may be stated very briefly. Under the bill as now written, the Federal Reserve Board has control of the regulation of credit in connection with new construction in the mortgage field, wherever private institutions participate. However, all construction credit in the governmental field—in other words, under the Government building programs, in connection with FHA and housing construction for veterans—is not subject to control by the Federal Reserve Board. That part of the field comprises roughly one-half of the whole field.

The big difference is that under existing banking law the national banks will not lend more than 60 percent in the case of private mortgages. In other words, they require a 40-percent down payment, whereas, as we know, the down payments required under the Government program are very small. Recently, approximately a month or so ago, the President by means of Executive order increased the down payments by 5 percent. They still range from 5 percent to not more than 20 percent, I believe. So an inflationary influence exists in the field of governmental insured housing construction credit.

I think from a reading of the bill many persons receive the mistaken impression that the Federal Reserve Board has real power over governmental housing construction credit, whereas the fact of the matter is that the Federal Reserve Board does not have such power.

It is inconceivable to me that we should permit a down payment of 40 percent to be required in the case of private credit, but would leave governmental credit subject to the requirement of a down payment of as little as 5 percent, or sometimes ranging up to 20 percent. Of course the result of such a situation is to drive all the mortgages into the Government agencies.

So I think either we should take the Federal Reserve Board out of this field—because this field already is covered by the National Banking Act—or else the Federal Reserve Board should be given authority over the mortgages which are insured and guaranteed by Federal agencies.

This amendment simply gives to the Federal Reserve Board the power to determine the amount of down payment to be made, and the regulations to be imposed in that connection, in the field of mortgages guaranteed or insured by Government agencies.

This amendment was considered by the committee, and the committee turned it down. The reason for that, as the chairman will state, was I think the great concern that there might be some interference with the housing program on the part of the Federal Reserve Board. Of course there will be. Of course there should be. If we are serious at all about inflation, the only place we can make any impression upon it is in the field of Government construction; that is, construction loans guaranteed by the Government. If we are not serious about it, then I say we ought to delete the whole thing from the bill. I think it is entirely meaningless as now written. So, in order to be honest about it, I think we ought to adopt this amendment to extend the power of the Federal Reserve Board to the setting up of regulations in this field. I may say that the Joint Committee on the Economic Report specifically said in so many words that the over-all coordination of our fiscal policy ought to be in the hands of the Federal Reserve Board. The report of the Banking and Currency Committee leaves the impression that the Board ought to have this basic responsibility. It then proceeds to state, however, on page 47, that the primary responsibility in the field of mortgage credit is in the Housing and Home Finance Agency. I think it certainly ought to be clarified, and I offer this amendment in order to give the Federal Reserve Board the authority which I think we all would like it to have, to try to do something about credit, as I see it, in the tax field. That is the basic field so far as combating inflation is concerned. The next most basic one is the credit field.

The control bill as it relates as such to prices, about which we have argued so much, does not at all affect the real problem of inflation, but simply postpones its evil effects. In effect, I think it ultimately increases the evil effects of inflation, by reason of the very fact that they are postponed. But the field of credit control, along with taxes, is the field which is really and basically effective when it comes to the control of inflation.

I certainly hope the Senate will adopt this amendment. It would give an agency in which we all have confidence, I believe, really substantial power to do something in the field of mortgage credit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment would authorize the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to issue regulations relating to the extension of real estate construction credit, or the insurance or guaranty of such credit, by any Federal agency.

Under the bill as reported the President could issue such regulations, in spite of the provisions of existing law, with respect to such Government loans or insurance, after consultation with the Board of Governors. The amendment would transfer this authority from the President to the Board.

The committee considered and did not accept this proposal and I urge that the Senate reject it.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System have been given many new tasks under this bill, including the V-loans under section 301, consumer credit controls under section 601 and controls over private real estate construction credit under section 602. I question the wisdom of saddling them with an additional and extensive task.

Furthermore, it does not appear to me either necessary or appropriate to give the Board of Governors control over the credit functions of such executive agencies as the Veterans' Administration and the Housing and Home Finance Agency. These functions are not based solely on credit policies and problems, and should not properly be withdrawn from the control of the President.

Accordingly, I urge that this amendment be rejected.

I think the Senator from Arkansas will agree with me that the amendment would transfer authority from the President to the Board of Governors.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct. In actual effect, of course, I assume the Housing Authority would be the Agency which would act under the present authorization.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator will bear with me, the committee considered but did not accept this proposal, and, of course, as the chairman of the committee, I would naturally oppose it, because we desired to leave as much authority with the President as possible.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is it not true that the control of consumer credit, which is with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and which I think no one questions, is given here, yet there is no real substance to the power which we have given them over operating the field of mortgage credit, for the simple reason that the existing banking law already requires a minimum of 40 percent down payment? I do not think anyone would say that that is seriously inflationary, neither do I think anyone contemplates that we are going to increase the down payment in the near future, when we have got it so far out of line with the requirements of each public housing bill. That is the only point. There is not, in substance, so much given to the Federal Reserve Board under this bill, although the Board is mentioned in several instances.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I differ with my distinguished friend from Arkansas in thinking that we give the Federal Reserve System a great deal of power. But the Senator also knows that we give the Federal Reserve Board power over the Veterans' Administration and the Housing and Home Finance Agency. I do not think the Government agencies which have been functioning so well, agencies such as the Housing and Home Finance Agency, under the direction of Mr. Foley, Mr. Richards, and others, ought to be placed under the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the whole objective is not the promotion of building. I agree they have been functioning well. But the objective here is controlling inflation, and controlling a much greater extension of credit. That has not been even the objective of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. I do not want this amendment to be understood as casting any reflection upon or making any criticism of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not suggest that.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. IVES. The Senator from New York happens to be one of those who were inclined to favor this amendment when it was before the committee. Since that time, the Senator from New York has gone into this matter to a considerable extent and has discovered that this amendment, if it should happen to be adopted, would mean that there would in all likelihood be no VA or FHA housing during the coming year.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is on the assumption that the administration of the proposed act will be wholly arbitrary. I do not know how the Senator from New York could arrive at any such conclusion.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall yield presently to the Senator from Alabama the few remaining moments I may have. But I want to say that the American Legion and other agencies have been in touch with me by telephone and telegraph, and they are fearful that this amendment will do exactly what the Senator from New York has said.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator for a question, after which I shall yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has remaining 30 seconds only.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that in spite of the virtues of the Federal Reserve Board it has a distinct blind spot so far as veterans' housing is concerned and so far as public housing is concerned, and that to place this authority in the hands of the Federal Reserve Board would mean the guillotine?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina be given an additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection, except that if anyone on the other side of the debate wants another moment, I think he ought to be given it likewise.

Mr. KERR. I agree with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from South Carolina is recognized for one additional moment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield my remaining one moment to the Senator from Alabama, to whom I yielded some time ago.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York brought out the very point I wanted to suggest. It is that in the high-percentage Government-aid programs mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas we provide for veterans' loans, and we provide for a type of low-cost housing. In other words, we regulate the type, whereas so much of the conventional loan types which come under the Federal Reserve Board, and the 60 percent loans mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas, go into what might well be termed the luxury type of house. I do not believe that to get an adequate housing program we can afford to place an across-the-board limitation on it. In other words, the regulation must be such that it will look after the housing needs, while at the same time controlling the inflationary aspects of the program. For that reason, I believe that the committee arrived at a wise decision in trying to attain the balance by giving to the Federal Reserve Board control over the conventional type of private building, while retaining in the President, and, presumably, in the Housing and Home Finance Agency, but requiring consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, the type of housing for which Congress has provided under a definite housing policy.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield for a question?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The answer to the question may influence my vote on this amendment. Is it the Senator's interpretation that the Federal Reserve Board would have discretionary power to act differently in the case of low-cost housing mentioned by the Senator from Alabama or in the case of higher-cost housing which might not be so essential at the moment?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Certainly. There is nothing in the amendment or in the bill which would restrict the making of allowances, but the housing agencies want no interference whatever. If our objective is to promote housing, of course, we should not have this amendment at all; there should not be anything about it in the bill. I assumed our objective was to try to exercise some control over inflation. There can be no question that inflation in the mortgage credit field is great, and that is the field in which the Government has insured mortgages. We cannot have our cake and eat it, too. As much was said in the committee regarding the prices of lumber and building materials as on any other one item, with the exception of meat, perhaps. I do not think we should assume that the Federal Reserve Board would act completely arbitrarily. The Board has some good judgment, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. MAYBANK and other Senators requested a division.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hill	Millikin
Anderson	Hoey	Morse
Benton	Holland	Mundt
Brewster	Humphrey	Murray
Bricker	Hunt	Myers

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are unavoidably detained on official business.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. FULBRIGHT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I offer my amendment 8–17–50–I.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, between lines 16 and 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

(4) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any fishery commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) A price determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be generally representative of those received by fishermen for such commodity during the calendar year 1946, adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior for grade location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) a price for such commodity determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be generally representative of the prevailing prices received by fishermen for such commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal marketing conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, they are generally representative, with adjustments by the Secretary of the Interior for grade, location, and seasonal differentials. No ceiling shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any fishery commodity below a price which will reflect to fishermen producing such fishery commodity a price for such fishery commodity equal to the higher price thereof specified above: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of fishery commodities a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such production, processing, and marketing. The President from time to time shall adjust ceiling prices for fishery commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, in order to make appropriate allowances for unusual increases in costs of production, processing, and marketing, and factors which result from the hazards occurring in connection with the production, processing, and marketing of such fishery commodities. The President shall stabilize salaries, wages, or other compensation of those fishermen whose compensation is customarily based upon shares of amounts procured from the sale of fishery commodities or products thereof in such manner as to preserve the customary relationship between such compensation and the amounts so procured, without regard to the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, this amendment endeavors to recognize the importance of the fishing industry as a source of food and endeavors to recognize that it has certain hazards similar in nature to some of those faced by agriculture.

The bill as it now stands on pages 44 and 45 applies certain principles to agriculture in an endeavor to try to avoid as best we can some of the pitfalls which took place during the OPA administration during the recent war which made almost unprocurable at any price certain agricultural commodities.

The amendment endeavors to set up a criterion by which a fair price shall be established for fish. It sets up for this purpose the higher of the two following prices: First, a price determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be generally representative of prices received by fishermen for such commodity during the calendar year 1946 to a year when the price of fish was both under and without control, adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior for grade, location, and seasonal differentials; or, second, a price for such commodity determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be generally representative of the prevailing prices received by fishermen for such commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal marketing conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, they are generally representative, with adjustments by the Secretary of the Interior for grade, location, and seasonal differentials. No ceiling shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any fishery commodity below a price which will reflect to fishermen producing such fishery commodity a price for such fishery commodity equal to the higher price thereof specified.

The amendment also provides for a generally fair and equitable margin, not only for production, but for processing and marketing. In addition to this, it recognizes the fact that many fishermen work on what is called "shares." That is, their wages are determined by the total price received by the ship for their total catch. It can be clearly seen from this that the fishermen's wages are tied directly to the ceiling price of fresh fish landed at fish piers. There was considerable trouble in facing this actual fact during the OPA administration. This amendment seeks to clarify this point, which is of exceeding importance to the men who make their living going to sea and fishing.

We in New England want the agricultural communities to recognize the fact that fish is an exceedingly important source of food. It is important throughout our country and I hope that no ceilings will be placed through any provisions of this bill that will do serious or permanent injury to all the people depending upon fishing for their livelihood and at the same time be fair to the consumers. That, Mr. President, is the real basis for this amendment. I am perfectly willing to admit that in the preparation of this amendment speed was of the essence and the language may not be the best that can be provided in order to accomplish the purpose which I have outlined.

Mr. President, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency will take the amendment to conference and so perfect it that it will accomplish the purpose desired, if it is not in proper form as I have offered it.

I yield the rest of my time to my colleague the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have received a brief from the Atlantic Fishermen's Union. I should like to ask my colleague whether the amendment covers what they desire.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I believe it covers the principles suggested by the fishermen's union. I think it also covers the principles suggested by the processors and by others interested in the fishing industry. We have tried to make it cover all the classes.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have yielded the remainder of my time to my colleague.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota, although I do not think there is much time.

I should like to add my expression of hope to that of my colleague that the amendment will be adopted, for the reason that fish is a very important article of food, and is entitled to be the beneficiary of the same type of philosophy we adopt for other food producers.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Public Law 548, Seventy-ninth Congress, chapter 671, second session, House Joint Resolution 371, a joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, contained a provision in section 7 reading as follows:

SEC. 7. Section 2 (i) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(i) For the purposes of this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, fish and other sea food shall be deemed to be agricultural commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from fish or other sea foods shall be deemed to be manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities: Provided, That the provisions of section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall not be applicable with respect to fish and other sea foods and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, but the maximum price established for any fish or sea food commodity or for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom shall not be below the average price therefor in the year 1942."

Mr. President, I mention this to show that there is precedent for the Senate taking the kind of action requested. Congress has on another occasion come to the same conclusion, after deliberation and study. It seems to me this is a further reason why it is justifiable to urge the adoption of the amendment.

I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Massachusetts cannot yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, the amendment relates to all commercial fishing, or commercial fish prices, whether salt or fresh fish, does it?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It does; there is no distinction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this is a typical example of trying to legislate OPA regulations on the floor of the Senate. With all my respect and deep appreciation for the junior Senator from Massachusetts and the senior Senator from Massachusetts, I wish to make a statement about the amendment.

The wage portion of this amendment would, in effect, exempt fishing from normal wage-stabilization policy and establish a rigid method of acting upon wages in sea-fishing operations where fishermen typically are paid a fixed share of the proceeds of the sale of the catch. This would be done by stabilizing the sharing ratio, regardless of the effect of this action upon fishermen's earnings. If the catches are large, earnings may rise without limit, leaving earnings behind in other industries where rates are stabilized and in other parts of the fishing industry where workers are paid by the day or the piece. If the catches are small, earnings will fall, and it will be impossible for the board or agency administering the wage-stabilization program to make any kind of equitable adjustment designed to support earnings. No such rigid standard is set in the bill for any other industry or situation.

I agree with what the junior Senator from Massachusetts said in part. But we have not had time to study the fishing industry and we do not have enough information to provide special treatment for this industry. Since we are unable to do the same thing for many other industries, and since the bill does provide the flexibility essential for a fair and equitable treatment of all industries and their employees, I do hope the Senate will reject this amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator mentioned one of the provisos. There are two provisos in the bill. The other proviso would allow the Secretary of the Interior to study the prices for fish for the same period and to suggest treatment such as is accorded some other agricultural commodities. There are hazards in the fishing industry which are different from those encountered in the production of agricultural commodities.

I hope the Senator will take the amendment to conference and that some appropriate provision can be drafted, because I believe it is not fair to fishermen that the bill should contain no provision concerning them, when we are taking care of poultry raisers and producers of various other agricultural commodities. I hope the Senator will take the amendment to conference, and if it is not in proper form I shall be glad to cooperate in working it out in proper form. I repeat, I hope the Senator will take it to conference.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree that the Senator speaks the thoughts of many fishermen, but the amendment does not include those who fish for crabs or shrimp or other types of fish, or oysters, or others interested in what comes out of Chesapeake Bay. The Congress spent much time in developing support programs, but it did not see fit to include fishing products.

I deeply sympathize with the Senator and the plight of the New England fishermen, and other fishermen, those of the South Atlantic and those on the West Coast. Nevertheless, I do not see how we could take the suggested action relating to fish unless we did the same thing for the crab men and the shrimp men.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I point out in answer to the Senator from South Carolina this amendment is drawn in order to cover shrimp, oysters, any fresh water fish, or any other sea food. When the Senator is taking care of agricultural products, it seems to me fair to take care of fish.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me say to the Senator that I am not taking care of any agricultural products. The only agricultural amendment I have offered was by request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired. All time on the amendment has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] and myself, I call up an amendment which we have at the desk, which we offer and ask to have stated. The amendment is dated 8–10–50–D.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 68, line 10, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words, "and the heads of regional or State offices of such agency."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I will try not to consume the entire 5 minutes.

Subsection (b) on page 68, to which the amendment applies, provides:

> The head of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Our amendment simply broadens that language or extends it to include the administrators of regional offices, and also of the State offices who administer the new agencies which the President is given the power to create.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Will the amendment also include the assistant director or assistant administrator?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No, not as we have prepared it. I will be glad to modify the amendment to include the national assistant director. I do not think we should go as far as to include the assistant State director.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator please state his modification?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The language of the bill is "The head of any independent agency created to administer," and so forth. After the word "head" I modify the amendment by inserting "and assistant head."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has modified the amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I wish to make merely a brief statement. Senators feel they are burdening themselves by increasing the number of appointees they must confirm. But I say the bill is far reaching in its scope. I do not know to what extent these powers may go once we put into effect these controls and set up these agencies. These men are going to have powers far beyond the power of a United States district attorney or a United States marshal, whom the Senate insists upon confirming. I say we will secure better administrators if their nominations are submitted to the Senate for confirmation. I want the confirmation under this bill extended to include the State administrators.

Mr. President, I wish to say that my good friend and colleague the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] joined with me in the amendment, and I shall be very happy to yield to him for a statement.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I am sure all of us have been impressed during the progress of this debate with the tremendous powers granted by the bill which will be vested in these administrators. Tremendous powers reside not only in the top man nationally, but in every one of the State administrators. It can develop that they will become virtually dictators of the economy of the States in which they serve. I think it is our duty to provide that the names of the appointees shall be channeled through the Senate, so that we may pass on the attitude the appointees have with respect to our economy, and their responsibility to public law. I therefore am especially in favor of the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas has accepted a modification which provides that not only the regional directors and State directors, but also the assistant national head, as well as the national head, shall be confirmed by the Senate. The amendment, as modified, takes care of an amendment I have presented, dated 8–15–50–J. The modified amendment would accomplish the purposes sought by my amendment. The amendment the Senator from Arkansas has offered extends confirmation even beyond the assistant national head, to the heads of regional offices and also to the State administrators. I think it is an amendment which ought to be adopted unanimously by the Senate, because under the bill tremendous power is granted, and as the distinguished Senator has already mentioned, when that power will terminate, of course, is a matter of speculation. Therefore, as long as the bill is in operation certainly we ought to have something to say about those who are to administer all the allocations and controls over the people of our States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I speak now not for myself but for the committee. The question of Senate confirmation of the heads of the regional or State offices of the independent agency administering title IV was raised in committee and rejected. If I remember correctly, only three members voted in favor of the proposal. The committee felt that it was sufficient if the head of this agency should be confirmed by the Senate. He will be the officer responsible for the administration of the whole program and his regional and State officers should be under his direct control and supervision and responsible to him. The operations of this agency will be carefully watched by the special committee and it will be the responsibility of the head thereof to account to that committee for any acts of his subordinates.

The committee was overwhelmingly in favor of rejecting the amendment. As a member of the committee, and as one who holds certain beliefs with respect to certain matters, I will say frankly that I voted for the amendment in the committee, but the committee was overwhelmingly against it. I trust the Senate will follow the wishes of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, on page 67, line 21 of the bill, we find the following language: "The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads" of any such new agencies.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Nebraska has an amendment which he says is covered by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, as modified. I am speaking solely with respect to the amendment sponsored by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WHERRY. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska provides that assistant national heads shall be included in the language of subsection (b) on page 68. It seems to me that inasmuch as the committee wrote the language that the President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads, confirmation should be had in both cases.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that the committee felt that those who are appointed to be national heads should be confirmed. In other words, an individual is appointed to a position in the Federal Government in Washington, as a national officer. The committee believed such an appointee should be confirmed by the Senate. But the committee did not believe that those persons appointed to be State heads should be confirmed. Under the bill, of course, the governor of the State would make the local appointments.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator would not object, would he, to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska which provides for confirming the assistant national head as well as the national head of the organization?

Mr. MAYBANK. I would not want to embarrass the distinguished Senator from Arkansas. I went as far as he did.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Do I understand the amendment provides that the State administrators——

Mr. MAYBANK. The State directors.

Mr. MYERS. And the assistant State directors must have Senate confirmation? Does it occur to the Senator that that is the easiest way to throw this whole thing into politics, and that unless the individual is politically pleasing, he is not going to be confirmed.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no such amendment, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. I know the Senator has not, but does he not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania, that such procedures would throw the whole thing into the field of politics?

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course that occurred to the committee. I have my own ideas on the subject.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As the amendment is drawn, it does not apply to confirmation of the assistant heads of the State agencies, but does apply to confirmation of the State administrators. If that is putting the matter into politics, then we need a little more politics in this country.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I promised the Senator from Pennsylvania that I would yield to him next. I yield to him at this time.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, let me say that perhaps we need a little more of that kind of politics, as the Senator has said——

Mr. MAYBANK. I never said that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. I am replying to the Senator from Arkansas in making the statement I just made. In reply to the Senator from Arkansas, I say to the Senator from South Carolina that perhaps we need this kind of politics; but God help the United States if we get this kind of politics in connection with the administration of an agency engaged in developing the national defense of our country.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What I mean is that when we are going to delegate the tremendous powers which will be delegated by means of this bill, it behooves the Senate of the United States to have something to say about those who are going to administer those powers.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The chairman of the committee will recall, Mr. President, that in the committee I proposed that we permit the Governor of each State to appoint the State director.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. However, a majority of the committee did not seem to favor that proposal.

Then by a rather large majority the committee voted in favor of a provision requiring confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. No; in the committee we rejected that proposal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired; all time on the amendment has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, what is the number of the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has not been printed.

The amendment will be stated at this time.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

In order to assure adequate supplies of agricultural commodities for defense purposes, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to make available through loans, purchases, or other operations, price supports of basic farm commodities at not less than 90 percent of parity, and may support any nonbasic farm commodity at not less than 90 percent of parity if he deems it necessary to do so for defense purposes, providing such support of any given commodity does not, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, result in the production of excessive supplies of said commodity.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator if copies of the amendment are available?

Mr. YOUNG. The amendment has not been printed. The one I had printed and which I intended to offer has been considerably modified but would still extend the present 90 percent price support program for farm commodities.

Price supports under the Anderson Act are due to drop from 90 percent to 80 percent for the 1951 crop.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have just been handed a copy of the amendment, but I do not believe copies of the amendment are available to Members of the Senate generally.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, is the time taken by the Senator from South Carolina at this point charged to the time available to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to proceed, and I refuse to yield.

Let me say that the amendment is very simple. It is on the order of the Steagall amendment, which was in effect during the last war; but this amendment is not nearly as rigid as the Steagall amendment was.

My amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall support the prices of basic agricultural commodities, at levels not less than 90 percent of parity, if he deems it necessary in the war effort, in order to provide the necessary stocks of commodities for the war effort. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds that excessive stocks are on hand, he can reduce the support price.

Mr. President, fluctuations in the prices of agricultural commodities cause them to be entirely different in this respect from other commodities. Presently and during the past 2 or 3 years, the prices of basic agricultural commodities have been almost exactly the prices set by the price-support program.

Normally a 250,000,000-bushel carry-over of wheat is all that is necessary. The critical world situation, however, with the possibility of a major war, makes it necessary that we maintain rather sizable stocks in reserve of all major farm commodities. This carry-over, or reserve, is a very depressing factor on market prices. Building up this necessary reserve means there is no possibility of the prices of these farm commodities going above support level. Because of these and other reasons farmers who are being asked to increase production should be entitled to at least the present price level. If prices fall to 80 percent of parity, as they are scheduled to under the Anderson Act, the farmer will be penalized. With a 600,000,000-bushel carry-over of wheat as may be necessary, there would be no chance that wheat ever would rise in price above price-support level, even if that level were only 60 percent of parity.

This amendment does not increase the price-support level—it merely prevents a drop. In other words the amendment merely provides that the 10-percent reduction in the prices of basic farm commodities, which is supposed to go into effect next year, will be postponed if the Secretary of Agriculture deems it advisable to support the prices at a higher level in order to encourage greater production.

I should like to point out that since 1947 the prices of the farm commodities have dropped drastically. In 1947 the net income to farmers was $17,800,000,000. In 1950 it is estimated to be only $13,000,000,000. This drop in farm income was during a period when wages to labor and the prices charged by industry increased greatly.

I should also like to point out that in the case of the basic farm commodities, after 17 years of the operation of this support program up to date there is presently a net profit of $50,000,000. I think that fact often is overlooked. Let me repeat that after 17 years of the operation of the price-support program, so far as basic commodities are concerned, as of today we still have a $50,000,000 profit.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Do I correctly understand that the Senator's amendment provides that the provision of 90 percent of parity in the case of basic commodities—which provision is in effect for this crop year—shall be extended into the next crop year, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to fix that as the support program for nonbasics which are necessary to the war effort?

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota, in connection with his statement that the support program has made a profit of $50,000,000 during the past 17 years, whether he is aware that that situation comes about only as a result of the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation has been listing as profits nearly $4,000,000,000 of appropriated funds.

Mr. YOUNG. The $4,000,000,000 the Senator speaks of was for consumer subsidies during the last war charged to the Commodity Credit Corporation. They had nothing to do with the price-support program to farmers. The Commodity Credit Corporation is selling some of its stock of cotton at the present time at a very handsome profit. Spring wheat, too, has been selling at a little above the support price, for a considerable length of time. But when we have a 400,000,000- or 500,000,000-bushel wheat surplus—and we have to have a surplus of about that much or more in view of the present critical world situation—there is little chance that wheat ever will rise in price above any support level whether it be at 90 percent, 70 percent, or 60 percent of parity. For example, when wheat marketing is exceptionally heavy in the fall, there would never be a price above the support level, even if the support level were only 60 percent of parity.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Would the amendment provide, for example, that in the case of a shortage of linseed oil or of any other flax product, the support price would be no more than 90 percent of parity?

Mr. YOUNG. No; the Secretary of Agriculture can go above 90 percent. The amendment does not change the provisions of law which would apply in that situation at all. There is a provision in the Agricultural Act itself which allows the Secretary to support at any level above 90 percent if he deems it necessary to provide the increased production to meet an emergency situation. Should this amendment be defeated I believe the Secretary of Agriculture can support farm-commodity prices at 90 percent of parity although it is not mandatory. I hope he will do so at least during this war situation. Since this amendment was offered in the Senate last week the Secretary has announced that he may support basic commodities at 90 percent of parity for next year. I hope he will do so even though it isn't mandatory under the existing legislation.

Mr. HUMPHREY. But in the case of the nonperishables, the Secretary of Agriculture could permit the price to go up to at least 90 percent of parity; is that correct?

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. What the Senator from North Dakota really is proposing is the Steagall amendment of World War II. Is that not correct?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; except this amendment is somewhat milder. I would offer an amendment exactly the same as the Steagall amendment if I thought there was any chance of passage.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I think the amendment is splendid, and I shall support it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. The distinguished Senator is proposing to protect the farmers of the United States, is he not?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes. Personally, I should like to go further than the amendment goes, but I have compromised somewhat in order to obtain more farm organizational support. I understand that the Farmers' Union is in favor of the amendment but would prefer an even higher level. I understand that the Grange is completely in support of the amendment as written.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a letter I have received today from J. T. Sanders, legislative counsel of the National Grange.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D. C., August 21, 1950.

Hon. MILTON R. YOUNG,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR YOUNG: We understand that you intend to propose today the following amendment to the Defense Production Act of 1950:

"In order to assure adequate supplies of agricultural commodities for defense purposes the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to make available through loans, purchases, or other operations, price supports of basic farm commodities at not less than 90 percent of parity, and may support any nonbasic farm commodity at not less than 90 percent of parity if he deems it necessary to do so for defense purposes, providing such support of any given commodity does not, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, result in the production of excessive supplies of said commodity."

We believe this amendment would be a very useful change in the act and heartily recommend its passage for the following reasons:

1. It would remove much of the uncertainty which would adversely affect production, and would assure the Nation the necessary supplies of defense farm products.

2. The provision would insure the preservation of the principle of flexibility of support if supply of any commodity threatened to become excessive.

Thus with the reasonable double assurance of adequate supplies and that excessive supplies will be avoided, we would greatly facilitate the maximum nonwasteful contribution of farmers to defense preparation.

Sincerely yours,

J. T. SANDERS,
Legislative Counsel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Without encroaching upon the time of the chairman of the committee, is it not possible for me to rise to speak against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Such a point of order can be made at any time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill. I shall be glad to discuss the point of order, if the Vice President desires that I do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator briefly. The Chair supposes that the 5-minute limitation applies in connection with a point of order, as well as in connection with any other procedure at this time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that section 402 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 permits the Secretary of Agriculture to raise agricultural prices to any level which may be necessary. It gives him full authority to do anything he may wish to do in that connection.

The purpose of the pending bill is to prevent inflation, preserve the value of the national currency, insure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by means of excessive costs and prices, and so forth. Those purposes are stated at various places in the bill.

Under the amendment now proposed, the Secretary of Agriculture would be required arbitrarily to raise commodity prices to 90 percent of parity and to hold them there as long as the bill remained on the statute books, I suppose. Under the amendment, the Secretary of Agriculture would be required to hold the prices of agricultural commodities to 90 percent of parity, not to 60 percent of parity, if there were a shortage.

Mr. President, we have a shortage of tung nuts; it is impossible to obtain a sufficient supply in the United States. This amendment would require the setting of a price level of 90 percent rather than 60 percent. Honey is under a 60 percent category. We are not suddenly going to increase the number of bees or the number of flowers from which they can get honey. But this proposal would require 90 percent on honey, because it could not be excessive. Dairy products are at 75 percent, potatoes at 60 percent, and so on through the list. I submit that this amendment is not designed to preserve the purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings. All the way through the whole theory of the bill is to prevent excessive prices, and the only point in this proposal is to try to make sure that the farm prices are raised.

The Secretary of Agriculture has agreed for the year 1951 that certain agricultural commodities shall be supported at 90 percent. He has done that under authority of the existing act, and I submit it is all wrong suddenly to compel him to carry things through the years the present emergency which now seems to be confronting us may continue.

I believe the amendment is absolutely not germane to the bill. I think any complete examination and study of it in connection with section 402 of the present law will show that it is not germane at all to the pending bill. If it were only for the purpose of making it possible to try to develop production, then it falls of its own weight, because section 402 goes much further than this proposal goes. It is purely a device to saddle 90 percent supports back on the war crops, as has been done by other legislation. We are still holding 90 percent supports on potatoes, because of that, and many people realize——

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does he intend to say that potatoes are supported at 90 percent?

Mr. ANDERSON. They are supported at 60 percent, but we are still holding potatoes because of the original provision written into the law that we had to maintain under the Steagall legislation prices for a period of 2 years after the war, and it is only because we have fought situations of that nature that we have excessive costs all the way up and down the line.

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the Senator make it clear that potatoes——

Mr. ANDERSON. Next year, as the law stands, there will be no support price on potatoes whatever. And what was it that destroyed support prices on potatoes? The level became too high. Instead of permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to have any discretion or to make any move, tung nuts went up to 90 percent, where they did not belong; wool, to 90 percent; honey, to 90 percent; dairy products, to 90 percent; and so on down through the list. The Congress spent a long time trying to work out a flexible system of price supports. I submit this is not possible in accordance with the terms of the amendment. If Senators will look at a section of the bill, page 40, subparagraph b, they will find the words, "establishing ceiling or ceilings on the price." This amendment establishes floors, not ceilings.

Mr. WHERRY and Mr. CAPEHART addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Does not that make it germane, though?

Mr. ANDERSON. The fact that it establishes floors, when the bill is designed to hold down the cost of living?

Mr. WHERRY. I see the point which the Senator makes relative to the merits of the proposal.

Mr. ANDERSON. The amendment is just the opposite of the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. But from the fact that in the very section mentioned by the Senator the bill proposes ceilings, why is it not germane if it also proposes floors?

Mr. ANDERSON. Because the objective of the bill is to control the cost of living.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand.

Mr. ANDERSON. This amendment is designed to raise the cost of living.

Mr. WHERRY. When title IV was added to the bill, probably after the policy was determined, it resulted in providing everything there is in the way of handling prices. There are ceilings, ceilings, ceilings. Now, it is desired to establish a floor. On that basis, I think the amendment is germane.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call attention to the fact that the bill starts with proposals "to protect consumers, wage earners, persons with relatively fixed and limited incomes." Is this amendment designed to protect them. No; it is designed to take as much away from them as possible, and it is a complete reversal of what the bill is supposed to do.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I wonder whether the Senator from New Mexico has given consideration to what this general language would accomplish with reference to doing away with limitations on the acreage of such crops as cotton and peanuts, which are a very definite part of the price-support program, but which under this title might or might not remain such, under the sole judgment of one man?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know what would be the effect of it from that standpoint, I may say to the Senator from Florida. I simply say the amendment is contrary to everything that is in the bill. The bill says it is designed to protect wage earners, to conserve the savings of persons with limited means, and a Senator proposes an amendment which does just the reverse, for it says that the farmers of the country—and I certainly have fought to obtain for them decent prices—shall have 90 percent on nonbasics. I call attention to the fact that under the amendment the Secretary "may support any nonbasic farm commodity at not less than 90 percent of parity, if he deems it necessary for defense purposes, providing such support does not result in the production of excessive supplies of said commodity."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, how much time have I left?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The Senator from South Carolina may have 5 minutes on the point of order.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not want 5 minutes on the point of order. I merely want to make a brief statement on behalf of the committee.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may read a telegram which I received from the president of the Indiana Farm Bureau?

The VICE PRESIDENT. All this argument now is on the point of order.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the point of order, but I do want to say, in discussing this amendment, that it is within the province of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which has spent many months during the past 3 years on this subject matter. It is not an amendment which should be adopted without most careful consideration. Its purpose is to keep prices up, and that is contrary to title IV, in my judgment.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I desire to read a telegram that I just received from the president of the Indana Farm Bureau, Inc., and it might be well if each Senator would pay close attention to it. It reads:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 21, 1950.
Senator HOMER E. CAPEHART,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Attempt will be made today to attach to defense production bill an amendment providing 90-percent rigid mandatory price supports on basic commodities. This amendment sponsored by Senator YOUNG and similar to Young-Russell amendment defeated by narrow margin year ago. 1949 Agricultural Act provides wide discretion for Secretary to set support levels up to 90 percent any time and above that in national emergency. No need of or justification for considering this matter at this time. Senate approval this amendment would label farmers as selfish interest seeking special privilege in war bill and would dramatically reduce our ability to work effectively on major issues involved this bill. In view letter Brannan sent Senator THOMAS on July 28 endorsing permanent 90-percent supports, confident Brannan will support this effort to destroy flexible support authority in 1949 act. Urge you use your influence in defeating this amendment.

HASSIL E. SCHENCK,
President, Indiana Farm Bureau, Inc.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not have any time to yield.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent that I may have one-half minute to answer the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The argument that is now being engaged in is supposed to be on the point of order, and to have nothing to do with the merits of the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, may I discuss the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the case of an appropriation bill, under the rule, whenever a point of order is made against an amendment on the ground of germaneness, the Chair is required to submit to the Senate the question of the germaneness of the amendment. Whenever an amendment is offered, under the cloture procedure, the Chair passes on the germaneness of the amendment, which, of course, is subject to appeal. The Chair cannot split the difference.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Under the order which obtains and under which the Senate is now acting, is not the Senator from North Dakota entitled to time in which to debate the point of order that has been raised by the Senator from New Mexico? It would seem to me that under the point of order he would have 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the agreement, it is provided that the proponent of the amendment or motion shall have 5 minutes, and the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina, would have 5 minutes. As the Chair interpreted the point of order made by the Senator from New Mexico, it entitled him to 5 minutes on his point of order. The agreement is rather rigid that the other 5 minutes is to be taken by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. That does not give the proposer of the amendment much chance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He had 5 minutes on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The VICE PRESIDENT. One minute.

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield that 1 minute to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina for this extra minute. Mr. President, I wanted to point out that the original Steagell amendment was an amendment to the Stabilization Act during the past war, which ought to make this amendment germane to this Price-Control and Stabilization Act. The telegrams received here by so many Senators, sponsored by the Farm Bureau, refer to the original amendment I proposed and had printed. That is not the amendment I now offer. The original amendment would go further in making 90-percent supports more rigid and mandatory. The only reason I am not offering it now is that it would stand less chance of passage than my present amendment, which retains some flexibility. There is nothing in the bill, as I see it, to increase the prices of commodities to the poor people of the Nation, as indicated by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON]. It merely provides that present levels of support be continued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from North Dakota may have four additional minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want that time? The Chair is prepared to rule.

This is obviously not an appropriation bill. Therefore, a provision that a point of order on the question of germaneness shall be submitted to the Senate, does not apply. It is not a procedure under cloture where the Chair passes on the germaneness of an amendment. Therefore, under the practice which has been more or less generally followed, the question of the germaneness of the amendment is submitted to the Senate. The Chair is willing to pass on the point of order if the Senate wishes. An appeal may be taken in either case.

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in order. On page 42 of the bill it is provided that no ceiling shall be established on any agricultural commodity except in two cases. In the first instance, it shall not be below parity, and in the second instance, it shall not be below the average price on June 15, 1950. It seems to the Chair that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is germane to those provisions. That is the theme running through the whole chapter on agricultural products. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. It is offered on behalf of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 35, line 18, after "2 for", it is proposed to insert "the encouragement of."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this amendment merely asks for encouragement. I do not know whether the Senator has discussed it with the minority leader or the majority leader, but I see no objection to the word "encouragement" being inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma want to consume his time, in view of that statement?

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. It is a question of oil, is it not?

Mr. KERR. No; it has to do with minerals. The amendment is to insert after the word "for" the words "the encouragement of."

Mr. BRICKER. Is it for the encouragement of resale?

Mr. KERR. No; it is for the encouragement of exploration of strategic minerals and metals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment "I" and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 43, it is proposed to insert the following new sentence at the end of line 21:

In no event, however, shall the President select a base period for the stabilization of the component wage, salary, or other compensation of any material, service, or property different from that selected for the ceiling price of that material, service, or property.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, this amendment would require that in the stabilization of wages the President may accept or use as a base period for such stabilization program substantially the same base period that he uses in fixing prices. The same base period that would be used in the control of wages is selected for price control in a general wage-control and price-control program. This would eliminate the possibility that the President could choose 1950 prices and 1951 wages for a base period for any given commodity. Where prices have risen and wages have not increased, the President could, under this authority, roll back prices to the period in which he fixed the basic wage formula of stabilization, or of freezing, whichever it might be, of the wages for that period.

Some Senators have mentioned the fact that if we stabilize prices, we should stabilize wages as of the same general period; that we should not go into a period of wage increases now without commensurate price increases to meet the wage increases; that we should not permit price increases without responsibility for increasing wages to meet them. If the period is fixed prior to the Korean episode, I think prices and wages ought to be stabilized and fixed as of the same general period.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, speaking for myself, and, I trust, for some of the Members on this side of the aisle, and, I hope, for all members of the committee, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio would require the President to use the same base period in controlling wages in any industry that he uses in controlling prices in that industry. The only provision in the bill for the use of a base period is the provision contained in section 402 (d) requiring the President to give consideration to comparable prices and wages in the period May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. This provision is applicable to wages as well as prices. There is some doubt, therefore, as to the effect of this amendment. If it is intended to require that the President fix wages and prices at exactly the same levels as they were during some base period, we believe it is too inflexible and is inconsistent with the provisions of the bill which require him to take many other factors into consideration in fixing wage and price controls. Furthermore, wages are usually changed at infrequent intervals and reflect market conditions of an earlier period, so that an inflexible rule requiring the use of a base period might well produce many inequities.

I should like to say in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Ohio that the committee considered at great length the question of the relationship between prices and wages, includin the question of the wages of the General Motors Co. and of other corporations which agreed to raise wages several times. If we were to roll back wages which had been raised, interfering with contracts which had been agreed to, we would be in a difficult situation. While I should like to see wages and prices frozen, and frozen at the same date, I do not see how we can very well do it. I say that because, as the Senator knows, we had quite a discussion in the committee, particularly with reference to large contracts in the Detroit area and other areas, and with reference to situations in different industries, where wages might be high in relation to prices or prices might be high in relation to wages freezing prices and wages as of the same date would give a producer an unfairly small margin in the first case, an unfairly large margin in the second case.

Mr. BRICKER. But there is no fixed formula by which we can assure absolutely equitable treatment both of wages and prices at the same time. There is no date that can be taken which would assure absolute fairness to all.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not see how it can be done, because inequities must be considered and other elements must be considered, including contracts. Requiring freezing of wages and prices at the same period would increase these inequities.

Mr. BRICKER. The amendment would require the same general base period. It would not require a roll-back of any wages fixed by contract, and it would not require the roll-back of any prices, but if there was a fixing of prices on a general base period, the same base period would have to be used for the fixing of wages.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to refer the Senator to page 42 of the bill. He will agree with me, I think, that under the subsection beginning at line 9, if the President roll wages back he must take that fact into consideration.

Mr. BRICKER. But the President is not required to roll them back.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not correct to say that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio were adopted, and the President should roll prices back to July 15, he would be compelled to freeze wages at the July 15 level? On the other hand, it is true that prices would have increased up to July 15, whereas wages would not have increased, and the result would be to give windfalls to the employers and hold labor back to the conditions which prevailed before hostilities began.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; and not only that, but certain contracts would have been entered into. The Senator from Illinois has studied the subject very thoroughly, and he knows that certain contracts in the big industrial areas provide for certain automatic wage increases.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. There is nothing in the bill which would require the President to fix the date of July 15. He must take into consideration prices which prevailed prior to the Korean episode, when prices started to increase.

Mr. DOUGLAS. He is not compelled to take that date; but suppose he should take July 15. That would give the benefit of the price increases to the employers. Therefore the result of the adoption of the amendment would be a decrease in the real wages.

Mr. BRICKER. It might also work the other way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. [Putting the question.]

Mr. BRICKER and other Senators requested a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I call up an amendment and ask for the clerk to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no common carrier or other public utility shall, at any time after the President shall have issued any stabilization regulations and orders under subsections (b) and (c), make any general increase in its rates or charges prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, unless it first gives 30 days' notice to the President, or such agency as he may designate, and consents to the timely intervention by such agency before the Federal, State, or municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask unanimous consent that I may ask the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader some questions with reference to the unfinished business, the time not to be taken from the time allotted to the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HILL. Reserving the right to object, the Senator means that the time would not come out of my 5 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to make a statement. Several Senators have come to me and asked how long the Senate will remain in session. Everyone is familiar with the fact that at 1:30 tomorrow we begin voting on the road bill. The minority leader and the majority leader determined this morning that today we would finish consideration of all amendments to the pending bill and the itself. That was the understanding. I merely wanted to know, for the benefit of other Senators what we are to do now. There are approximately 35 more amendments to be considered, at at least they are pending. I do not know whether the Senate wishes to take a recess until 7 o'clock and then return and finish the consideration of the bill and amendments. I do not believe that the remaining 35 amendments will take so long to consider as the amendments which we have disposed of. However, there are 35 amendments still pending. I should like to ask the majority leader and the minority leader what their wishes are so that we may accommodate the other Senators. I ask the question because of the position into which the distinguished majority leader and minority leader have put me because I am in charge of the bill and I have been asked these questions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, insofar as the majority leader is concerned, I think we should go ahead and see if we cannot finish consideration of all the amendments. I presume that we shall not take 10 minutes on each amendment. Some of them undoubtedly we can finish in a hurry. We should be able to finish all the amendment within a few hours. If we take an hour out for dinner now I am afraid we shall be here until about midnight, because the minute we get some fuel into us the inclination is to talk more and more. I do not want to cut off anyone in debate, but I do believe that if we sit for a few hours we can finish with all amendments and the bill. At least we must finish at some time tonight.

Mr. MAYBANK. There are 35 amendments still pending.

Mr. WHERRY. I am quite sure that not all the amendments will be offered. Although we could recess for an hour or so, I believe that if we sat through we would save some time in the end, and we would facilitate consideration of the unfinished business. I hope we can go right on and vote on all amendments. I am sure that all 35 of them will not be offered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as to the pending amendment, let me say that the bill very properly exempts from any control by the President or any Federal agency whatever the fixing of rates by any utility commission on any carrier or any public utility of any kind. The amendment would provide that before there could be a general increase in utility rates, notice would have to be given to the President or such agency as he designated, if and when he does provide for the controls which the bill empowers him to provide, and that the President or such agency should have the right to appear before the particular regulatory body and present whatever facts the agency may see fit to present, if it desired to do so. In other words, it simply gives to the agency of the Federal Government the opportunity to show what a proposed general increase in rates might amount to, or what the impact of it might be.

The amendment is exactly similar to a provision in the stabilization act of 1942. The act carried a provision which the amendment now provides for. Experience showed that the provision in the Stabilization Act of 1942 was invaluable, particularly to REA co-ops in making sure there was no general increase in their rates without an opportunity being given for the agency to come forward and state the facts.

I offer the amendment on behalf of myself and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY]. It would give to REA co-ops the same protection which they enjoyed under the Stabilization Act of 1942. We wish to have them receive the maximum amount of power they need in order that they may carry on their agricultural production. We know how great and how fine that production was during the last war. All we ask is the same protection for them during this emergency that they had during the last war.

Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina, I hope very much he will agree to take this amendment to conference.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I know of the experience during the last war, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 38, after line 9, strike out all of title IV.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if we adopt this amendment we can possibly go home a couple of hours earlier.

Title IV, which I suggest be stricken out, is the title which has to do with rationing, wage control and price control, something which the President of the United States did not ask for, something which the Committee on Banking and Currency did not hold any public hearings on, and in my opinion as a member of the committee, it gave very little attention to what we are trying to do on the floor of the United States Senate with title IV, namely, to write an OPA measure. I am in favor of the Congress writing a standby price and wage control and rationing bill, to go into effect when this Nation goes to war. But we ought to spend days and days listening in public hearings to the testimony. We ought to call in all those who had experience in World War II and we ought to write a comprehensive bill. We ought to give much thought and study to it.

The bill about ready to be passed tonight is a monstrosity. There is no one who can administer the bill with the amendments which have been offered and adopted on the floor of the Senate. I strongly urge that title IV be eliminated, that we pass the remainder of the bill, and that then Congress prepare a standby price and wage control and rationing bill, and give it the consideration it should have.

The President has not asked for this particular type of legislation. That which he has requested is in the other three titles of the bill. I believe the other three titles, generally speaking, constitute excellent legislation. There is much in those three titles which the President needs at the moment in order to prosecute the Korean war. I believe we need a law on the books to give the President stand-by controls if and when the Nation goes to war. The President says we are not at war, he says the presently difficulty is a police action. He refuses to declare a national emergency. He says he does not need title IV and that he does not want it. If he does not need it and does not want it, he certainly will not use it, and if he is not going to use it, why should we pass a piece of legislation which is most unsatisfactory? It cannot possibly be satisfactory as it has been handled.

I repeat, the committee listened to no witnesses, no one was called before the committee who had any experience whatsoever in World War II in respect to this matter. The bill is a hodgepodge. In my opinion it will be impossible of administration, and it seems to me the President will be forced to veto the bill, with the hodgepodge contained in title IV.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to strike out title IV and that a new bill covering the subject be introduced, and that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency be given all the time necessary to consider it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Indiana is aware of the fact, I am sure, that that we have all been deluged by telegrams, letters and telephone calls from farm people all over the country expressing fear lest price controls be put into effect on farm commodities, and that wage and salary and other controls be left out, and urging that the bill be amended in such a way that if controls are put into effect on farm commodities, they will be put into effect on everybody, so that the farmers will not run the risk of having only farm commodities and possibly certain other selected commodities controlled. Does the Senator from Indiana know whether there is any provision in the bill now that if controls are put into effect on, let us say, farm commodities, they must be put into effect on all other categories?

Mr. CAPEHART. The nearest the bill comes to that is in title IV, where it is provided that if controls are put on generally, then wages and prices must be controlled, but it is not specific, and I doubt if any two men would give the same interpretation to the language.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, an amendment will be offered to cover the point the distinguished Senator from Vermont has mentioned. There is nothing in the bill that accomplishes what the Senator suggests.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator is raising the point I am trying to make, namely, that title IV should be stricken from the bill, and that title IV should be a completely new bill, controlling prices and wages and rationing if and when an emergency arises.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I offer my amend H before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out title IV. It has to be called up at this time.

Mr. CAPEHART. A parliamentary inquiry. Does that completely take me off my feet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Ohio takes precedence of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of subsection (b) of section 402 beginning on line 5 on page 40, through line 8 on page 41. To amend lines 9, 10, and 11 on page 41 so as to read as follows: "(b) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders"; on line 4 on page 42, to insert the word "not" after the word "may" and strike the word "either"; on line 6 on page 42, to strike the word "or", and insert in lieu thereof: "but may be taken only"; on lines 7 and 8 on page 42, to strike the language: "and in either event may include retail sales for household or personal use" and insert in lieu thereof: "subject to the exceptions provided hereafter in subsection (e) of this section or provided by the President under the authority contained in subsection (f) of this section"; on lines 12 and 13 of page 42, to strike the language: "comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living" and insert in lieu thereof the word "generally"; on line 14 of page 42, to change "(d)" to "(c)". On line 22 of page 43, to change "(e)" to "(d)". On line 17 of page 45, to change "(f)" to "(e)". On line 8 of page 46, to change "(g)" to "(f)". On line 17 of page 46, to insert a period after "(b)" and to strike the word "or"; and to strike all of line 18 on page 46.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, this amendment eliminates from the bill selective controls. We debated this back and forth in the committee time and time again. First it was in, and then it was out.

In the judgment of the Senator from Ohio selective controls simply cannot operate. The whole productive system and price system of our economy throughout the country is so intricate, so involved, and so interconnected that immediately price control is put on one commodity or one segment of the economy immediately it is necessary to put it on some other. So it is impracticable and impossible, in the judgment of the Senator from Ohio, to administer selective price controls.

If we do have selective price controls, then the question further arises whether we are going to have selective wage controls with respect to the same commodities. The President has full power to select prices and wages that are necessary to be controlled, or which, if controlled, might hinder the war effort. So we are not curbing the authority of the President in any way, but we are requiring in this amendment that when wage and price controls are applied under the section as amended, they must be applied generally and not selectively, and they must be applied concurrently to prices and to wages at the same time.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to say that I am going to vote for the amendment, and by so doing I have completely changed my position from the time I voted to report the bill favorably from the Committee on Banking and Currency. I have become more and more impressed with the fact that in dealing with price controls and wage controls on a selective basis we are succumbing to a creeping control which would give us a false sense of security, because we are dealing with symptoms only and by treating these symptoms we are very liable to find ourselves enmeshed in a credit expansion which finally will burst through all these controls of symptoms.

We need much heavier taxation than at present is in prospect. We need excess profits taxation well considered and well worked out. We need to make sure that we deny to the Treasury access to bank credit. There are a number of other things which we should do which we will not do if for a period this creeping control seems to be successful. We always have the reserve under the proposed amendment of the over-all control if the real emergency should arise.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a modification?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. On page 41, subparagraph (2) reads as follows:

> (2) stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this act, shall be issued whenever—

Will the Senator accept after the word "whenever" the words "ceilings are imposed under paragraph (1) of this subsection" and add a period there and strike the remainder of the language in that paragraph, page 41, down to and including the first three lines on page 42? The reason I ask the question is that it seems to me it is going to be very difficult to explain what is meant by stabilizing wages.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understand, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] has proposed that title IV be stricken out. As I understand, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] has amended the proposal made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. BRICKER. My amendment is to be considered and voted upon prior to the motion to strike.

Mr. MAYBANK. And then, as I understand, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] will offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. He is proposing to modify my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Therefore there would be available to Senators desiring to speak in opposition to the various proposals, 5 minutes on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to eliminate title IV, 5 minutes on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], on his amendment which is to be acted upon before action is taken on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, and 5 minutes on the proposed modification of the Senator from Nebraska. Several Senators on this side desire to speak.

Mr. WHERRY. I think the Senator from South Carolina is incorrect. The Capehart amendment does not come into the picture at this time. The amendment under consideration is the one offered by the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Nebraska has asked the Senator from Ohio if he will accept a modification of his amendment. So there will be no amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] has consumed his 5 minutes on his amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Then we have 5 minutes on the so-called Capehart amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 5 minutes on that amendment. The Senator from Ohio has the floor on his amendment, and the Senator from South Carolina is entitled to 5 minutes in answer to that. The Senator from Nebraska has merely suggested a modification of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. I accept the proposed modification. I modify my amendment to conform with the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Since the Senator from Ohio has accepted the modification, the Senator from Nebraska will not offer his amendment lettered "C" which he submitted some days ago. I should like Members of the Senate to know that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified, would accomplish exactly what the Wherry amendment lettered "C" would accomplish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment as a substitute.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, that would give us 15 minutes in all in reply.

Mr. WHERRY. No; it is an amendment in the second degree, which I am entitled to propose.

Mr. MAYBANK. No, Mr. President. I want to be certain that Senators on this side shall have full opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Ohio accepted the suggestion by the Senator from Nebraska to modify his amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I wanted to have a chance to say a word about that modification. I was about to offer a substitute, but I will not do so. I will not impose upon the Senate to that extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska has already in effect been accepted by the Senator from Ohio in modifying his amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Nebraska have any time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has no time left. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. What is the amendment, as modified? May we have it read?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, none of this comes out of my time, does it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. Request has been made that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified, be stated. That will not come out of the time of the Senator from South Carolina. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. To the amendment offered by him, Mr. BRICKER has accepted the following modification:

On page 41, line 23, strike the language commencing with the word "an" down to and including line 3 on page 42, and insert in lieu thereof the words "ceilings are imposed under paragraph (1) of this subsection."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall make only a brief comment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order. Why is the Senator from South Carolina recognized for 10 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because the Senator has 5 minutes remaining to speak in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska what his amendment does? Does it eliminate any possibility of ceilings?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate the question. It gives me an opportunity to explain the amendment. On page 41, line 23, after the word "whenever" I have proposed to insert the words "ceilings are imposed under paragraph (1) of this subsection." Paragraph (1) is immediately above paragraph (2), the language of which we are now considering. Then I propose to strike out the remainder of the language in paragraph (2) beginning with the words "an increase" on line 23, down to and including line 3 on page 42. That makes the requirement in subsection (b) that if ceilings are established under paragraph (1), stabilization of wages is also established under subsection (2), and it is done automatically at the same time.

Mr. MAYBANK. What effect would that have on the paragraph beginning in line 9, on page 42? Would that be stricken?

Mr. WHERRY. The first three lines on page 42 would be stricken. That is the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MAYBANK. No, I am speaking about the paragraph beginning in line 9 on page 42. What effect would the Senator's language have upon that?

Mr. WHERRY. It would have the very effect the distinguished Senator from Ohio just mentioned; that wages would automatically be stabilized under paragraph (2) when price ceilings are imposed under paragraph (1).

Mr. MAYBANK. That strikes out selective control?

Mr. WHERRY. I would say that that is exactly what it does. Voluntary controls are still provided under section 402 (a) but it provides controls clear across the board with respect to wages and prices when mandatory controls are applied.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I now yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, as I understand the two amendments, their effect, considered together, would be, when stated in simple terms, to do away with selective controls.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct; let us be frank about it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the committee discussed this matter rather at length, and decided that it was feasible to insert provision for selective controls. The committee recognizes the fact that there were a few items which have had run-away price increases since the beginning of the Korean war, and that instead of imposing price controls all the way across the board, it might very well be possible for the President to select particular items, for the time being, and control their prices.

Of course, there has always been some controversy over the question of whether selective price controls would work. In the days of the old OPA, similar questions arose. Some persons argued in favor of selective price controls, and others argued that they would not be workable.

The Joint Committee on the Economic Report, in the Eightieth Congress, under the chairmanship of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], went into this question, and submitted a report recommending selective controls, and said it was believed that a system to selective controls would work, and the committee recommended them. I refer to the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, of May 18, 1948, pages 6 and 7, at the time when the committee was under the chairmanship of the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and the able Senator from Vermont was also a very able and conscientious member of the committee.

Mr. President, that is just what we are recommending now; we are following the lead of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, under the chairmanship, at that time, of the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio, when that committee recommended a system of selective controls, back in the Eightieth Congress. We have simply reached in and taken a page out of their book, and have decided that now, when are faced with increasing prices—although they are still not as high as they were in the 1940's.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Joint Committee on the Economic Report recommended no such thing. It said that if Congress were asked to provide authority to control a particular item, Congress might provide such authority, but that Congress should provide no powers whatsoever beyond that.

There are, perhaps, a few items which could be controlled selectively.

The Joint Committee on the Economic Report never recommended the provision of any general discretionary power on the part of the President to control the economy or to fix prices or wages. However, if the President wanted to deal with a particular commodity and wanted to ask Congress for authority to do so, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report recommended that Congress consider granting such authority.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I have only a short time available to me.

Of course the Senator from Ohio is correct in his statement, and it is in accordance with what I said before his return to the chamber.

The President did recommend selective controls; and the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, under the chairmanship of the able Senator from Ohio, said that could be done, but said it did not believe such controls could be extended over a wide field without going into general controls.

Selective controls are what we are recommending now.

During the time this bill has been under consideration, I think we have seen it have a helpful effect by reason of the suggestion that we were about to provide for selective controls. We saw prices run away in the case of a few items—for instance, prices on certain grades and classes of lumber and on certain cuts of meat, and on hides, rubber, tin, and a few other articles; but there has not been a stiff increase all the way across the board.

Mr. Ewan Clague, Director of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, testified before the committee that the cost-of-living index has risen very little, but that in a certain number of outstanding items there has been a very sharp increase in price.

That is why we voted in favor of giving the President the power to impose selective controls.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield, but only briefly, because my time is so limited.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator explain how it is fair to a steel worker in Pittsburgh, for instance, to have his wages controlled, if the wages of an aluminum worker in the same city are not controlled?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator has asked a question which I cannot answer in a short time but I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts can see that there could be occasions when it would not be necessary to control the wages of labor in one particular field, but would be necessary to control the wages of labor in another field, or that there could be cases where prices in one field would not need to be controlled, but where prices in another field would need to be controlled.

However, the question is whether there are to be selective controls of any kind, both price controls and wage controls. We are simply following the lead of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, in its report to the Eightieth Congress, in which it said that selective controls could be effectively imposed. After all, we do not have to have a total control of all prices and wages just because we want to control the price of meat or rubber. What we want to be able to do is to prevent high prices for a few items and prevent them from spilling over into the rest of the economy and kindling the fires of an all-out inflation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, has all time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator from South Carolina has 5 minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina said that he would yield that time to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the salient passage is on page 40.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit me to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Provided the time required for that purpose is not taken from my time.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course I suppose it must be taken from someone's time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not yield, if the time required for that purpose is to be taken from my time.

Mr. President, the proposal is that the President of the United States exercise controls only in cases where there has been an excessive and an inflationary rise in the price of materials. In other words, the selective controls are proposed to be limited to cases where there have been run-away prices.

If we consider the 28 commodities which are traded on the commodity exchanges, we find that the records for those commodities show an average price increase of 16 percent in the first month following the invasion of Korea. In the case of the 980 commodities, the increase was only 6 percent; and the increase in the cost of living was only from 2 to 3 percent.

In other words, the increase in prices had been confined to a small number of commodities. We find that of the 28 commodities traded on the commodity exchanges, a large increase in prices occurred in the case of rubber, tin, cocoa, coffee, sugar, zinc, meat, and lumber.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not have the time to yield.

Mr. President, if we consider the situation in the case of the commodities I have just mentioned, we find that two-thirds of them were imported commodities, which really involve no domestic problem whatsoever.

It seems to me that particularly in the case of the imported commodities which are purchased by us from countries where cartels control the price, it might be possible for the President of the United States to impose price ceilings, and thus hold down the wholesale price level and the level of the cost of living, and possibly prevent the need for general price controls.

The proposal to give to the President the power to impose selective controls is really a means of reducing the necessity for and the danger of having general price controls.

So I hope very much that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be rejected.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is any time left?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, has all my time been used?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me very briefly?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, it seems that the sentiment of the Senate is to vote on this question, judging from the expressions I have heard. However, I yield now to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from South Carolina; I appreciate very much his courtesy.

Mr. MAYBANK. I must inform the Senator that I am going to vote against the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. That is perfectly all right.

Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that on the basis of years of experience with OPA as applied to meat and after long experience with the so-called selective control system, we found that there cannot be an effective Price Control Act unless we control the prices of all products and unless we control wages.

If Senators really wish to do a thorough job and really wish to give standby powers to the President, so as to permit him to control prices and prevent inflation, that is the only way to do it.

For instance, consider meat. We controlled the price of meat at the consumer level, but we did not control it at the producer level. For a long time we did not control the price of corn. If the price of meat is controlled, it is necessary to control the price of corn. If the price of corn is controlled, it is necesasry to control the price of wheat. If the price of wheat is controlled, it is necessary to control the prices of all the cereal grains. If the price of meat is controlled, it is necesasry to control the price of poultry. It is merely silly to stand on the Senate floor and think that anyone can do the job of controlling prices in this country, particularly the prices of food and wages in industry, unless we go clear across the board. That is the only way to have an effective price control act. That is the way it should be, if we want to have the job done.

The same thing can be done with every other commodity mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Illinois. Steel can be included, and if it is, then it will become necessary to include all subsidiaries of the big steel companies, all the way through, otherwise gray markets will spring up which cannot be policed. It would be impossible to employ enough people to police them. It is necessary to go one way or the other. I should like to see this done voluntarily, but if it cannot be done that way, the President then says that in order to protect the national security and to get production and keep inflation down, he wants controls. When that happens, we should be sure that price ceilings and wage controls are applied simultaneously. I want to thank the distinguished Senator for the 2½ minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am always happy to yield to my friend from Nebraska. But, unfortunately, the Senator points to the dark side of the picture. I should like to think we will not be required to use these controls at all. The committee was hopeful that in providing for selective controls it would be unnecessary to go into all-out controls, which, as the Senator from Nebraska says, may become necessary. We are hopeful that that will be unnecessary.

Mr. WHERRY. That is also my hope.

Mr. MAYBANK. I agree thoroughly with what the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Illinois have said. Some of their remarks I did not hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], as modified.

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Chavez	Flanders
Anderson	Connally	Frear
Benton	Cordon	Fulbright
Brewster	Darby	George
Bricker	Donnell	Gillette
Bridges	Douglas	Graham
Butler	Dworshak	Green
Byrd	Ecton	Gurney

Lehman	O'Mahoney	Young
Lodge	Pepper

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will state the inquiry.

Mr. MAYBANK. Am I correct in my understanding that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska was accepted by the Senator from Ohio as a modification of the amendment offered by him?

Mr. WHERRY. It was accepted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understood, the Senator from Nebraska, in answer to a question of mine, answered that if this amendment were agreed to selective price controls would, of course, be done away with.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. So that is the issue. I merely wanted to emphasize the issue.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, since the Senator has raised the question, I should like to have 10 seconds for a reply. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as now modified by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, does exactly what the Senator has said. Of course, it is still a stand-by power, but if it goes into effect it will go clear across the board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], as modified.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRICKER. Am I correct that the vote is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified on the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, and that the question is not on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is unavoidably detained on official business, and if present would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is unavoidably detained on official business.

I announce that on this vote, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 36, as follows:

So Mr. BRICKER's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to strike out title IV.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Has the time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move that that motion be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified, was agreed to.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CAPEHART. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Will the Chair state the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, which would strike out title IV.

Mr. CAPEHART and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what purpose does the Senator from Delaware rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the appropriate place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, whenever the President decides that either price ceilings or wage stabilization is necessary, he must simultaneously declare both into effect as of the same base period, such base period being a 30-day period selected prior to June 24, 1950.

Beginning on page 40, in line 23, with the word "regulations", strike out through page 41, line 8 and insert the following:

Whenever a ceiling is established for any material, service, or property, the President shall prohibit any increase in any wage, salary, or other compensation paid by any seller of such material, service, or property.

Beginning on page 41, in line 19, with the word "regulations", strike out through page 42, line 3, and insert the following:

Whenever a ceiling is established for any material, service, or property, the President shall prohibit any increase in any wage, salary, or other compensation paid by any seller of such material, service, or property.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Has this amendment been submitted and printed prior to this hour?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I can explain it very easily——

Mr. MAYBANK. I did not ask that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no rule which requires that an amendment be submitted and printed prior to this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, my amendment is in the same situation as is the amendment regarding tobacco, which was passed on earlier in the day.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I had nothing to do with the tobacco amendment. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry suggested that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, we have just adopted an amendment offered by the junior Senator from Ohio which provides that if the President shall decide to put into effect either price or wage controls he must put them both into effect. But it does not provide that they must be computed as of the same base period. My amendment provides that if the President decides to take action which freezes either prices or wages, he must select for both the same base period, and it must be some 30-day period prior to the outbreak of the Korean hostilities. Under the bill the President would have power, notwithstanding any future wage freeze, to order wage increases in any industry which in his opinion could absorb such wage increases without corresponding price increases. In my opinion there is no such thing as a wage increase which does not result in a commensurate price increase in the manufactured product. My amendment strikes out that elective power of the President, and it says that if he is to establish either price or wage ceilings he must establish both of them as of the same date, using as a base some 30-day period prior to June 24 or the beginning of the Korean hostilities. He would be allowed to make no exception except as the Board makes exceptions to correct certain inequities.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not want to take much time on the amendment. However, the amendment which the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Virginia, and I offered was printed, and a statement was made. I have not seen any statement on this amendment. I do not know how far the amendment goes. I want it understood that the other amendment was printed and was lying on the table.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to know whether the Senator is proposing a roll-back of both wages and prices to some period prior to June 25.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not necessarily. I am proposing that whatever date is selected for prices and wages must be applicable to both, and whatever base period is selected must be a 30-day period prior to the outbreak of the Korean hostilities. Otherwise, any base period selected this side of June 24 would be the equivalent of paying a premium to any retailer or manufacturer who jumped the gun, and made unnecessary increases in his prices as well as any union that now rushed forward to obtain wage increases.

Mr. FLANDERS. It does not require an automatic roll-back?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it merely provides that both the wage earner and farmer be treated alike.

Mr. TYDINGS. I could not hear everything the Senator from Delaware said. Did I understand him to say that if a date is decided upon, it must be a date prior to the outbreak of the Korean hostilities?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Whatever base period for establishing wage or price ceilings is selected it must be some period prior to the beginning of hostilities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Unless that is done, we would have a situation where prices have gone up and wages have not gone up. Unless there is a roll-back to a date prior to the beginning of hostilities, it would not be fair to all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree, and that is why I am offering my amendment. I may also point out that this amendment would automatically repeal the provisions in the bill exempting certain agricultural products from any special consideration. That should be done in fairness to all agriculture.

Mr. MAYBANK. So far as I can gather, without reading all of the amendment, it is identical with the amendment we have already voted on. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not have before me a copy of the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, which indicates the difficulty under which we are operating.

However, as I listened to its reading it seemed to be identical with the proposal made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], which was recently defeated, namely, to require wages and prices to be stabilized as of the same date. If that is true—and I think it is true—the same objection holds, namely, that if we stabilize prices as of a given period, we would allow for price increases, which go to an employer. However, since wages lag behind prices we would not give to the workingman an opportunity to have his wages catch up with the increase in prices. Therefore, the effect of such a proposal would be to decrease the standard of living of the workers while giving speculative increases in prices to the employers.

Mr. TAFT. The base period must be prior to June 24, the date set out in the amendment. The Koreans attacked on the 25th.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That takes care of any increase since that date. However, there was a rise in prices during the preceding month. Prices had been going up, and wages had not been rising. So the amendment is a proposal to let the pre-Korean increase go to the holders of commodities but not to the workingmen themselves.

Mr. BRICKER. Under the amendment I think the President could go back previous to the increase in the month before the Korean outbreak.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It speaks of an average of a 30-day period.

Mr. THYE. May I ask a question of the author of the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Am I to understand that the producer of a commodity which was not up to parity as of June 15th or 25th, to whichever date reference is made, would have his price frozen at the price which prevailed at that time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not necessarily, but it would make it possible to freeze it as of that date. Do not forget this bill is supposed to protect the consumer against unnecessary price increases. It would repeal that provision as I said before—and I want it clearly understood—that Senators in voting for the amendment would be voting for the repeal of the special exemption which was placed in the bill earlier this afternoon whereby basic agricultural commodities would be entitled to special consideration. I do not think that other amendment should have passed. We cannot allow 10 percent increases in certain agricultural commodities and then consider freezing all other commodities without a corresponding increase.

Mr. THYE. I am sure that the Senator from Delaware is aware of the fact that certain producers were not at parity. In fact, certain producers were far below parity. If it is the intent of the Senator from Delaware to freeze those commodities at below parity, I do not believe the amendment should be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is unavoidably detained on official business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is necessarily absent.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] are detained on official business.

So Mr. WILLIAMS' amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to strike out title IV. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, there was so much confusion I could not hear what the Chair announced. As I understand, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to strike out entirely title IV.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have one further amendment which I should like to offer at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will send it to the desk, and it will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 46, between lines 18 and 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

(h) Whenever any wage, salary, or other compensation is stabilized pursuant to the provisions of this section, the President shall, notwithstanding any other provision of law, prohibit any step-increase or other increase in the wage, salary, or other compensation payable to any employee in any branch, department, or agency of the United States, other than an increase by reason of transfer or promotion to an existing position which has become vacant or to a new position which has been created because of an increased work load in such branch, department, or agency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this amendment provides that at the time the President declares price and wage controls in effect he must, at the same time, freeze the wages and salaries and other compensation of all civilian Government employees.

During the last war this provision was not in effect, and we had the unfair situation where Government employees were receiving salary increases through in-grade promotions while at the same time wages in private industry were frozen.

If under S. 3936 we are going to authorize the President to freeze wages in private industry, I think we have no alternative other than to make it mandatory that the Government, the largest employer, comply with its own regulation.

We are proposing to freeze the prices of all agricultural products. If we do this, and thereby freeze the cost of living to the Government employee, it is only fair that he in turn should expect his own salary frozen along with other incomes.

Unless this amendment is adopted whereby Government employees are subjected to the same rules as will apply to other workers the bill will be unfair and will not work.

This bill has been loaded with so many amendments providing special exemptions for practically every pressure group that unless we are very careful it will in its final form be worse than no legislation at all. We have completely forgotten the American consumer.

We have—

First. Provided special exemptions for the farmers producing wheat, corn, cotton, peanuts, and tobacco protecting them against any prospective roll-back in prices to the level prevailing prior to the Korean outbreak.

Second. The Senate has accepted an amendment providing a special subsidy to the mining industry amounting to about $100,000,000 annually. This is the same subsidy proposal which was rejected in 1948 and again in 1949. It has nothing to do with price controls.

Third. The Senate has rejected the amendment proposing that all nonessential Government construction be suspended for the duration of the emergency. This would release many strategic materials for our defense plants and at the same time reduce Government expenditures.

Fourth. Under an amendment which has been accepted, the Senate has empowered the President that (notwithstanding the fact that wage ceilings might be in effect) he can authorize wage increases in an industry which he thinks can absorb such increase without necessitating corresponding price increases in their products. We all know full well that there is no such thing as a wage increase without price increases.

Fifth. The amendment which I am now offering will eliminate one inequity in that it will strike out that provision in the bill which now proposes to exempt Government employees from future wage freeze. Why should Government employees be exempted from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. President, I think we need both wage and price controls provided they could be enacted in a bill which would treat all groups on a basis of equality and I had announced my intention to vote for such controls. We also need to confer upon the President the power to allocate certain materials which are needed for our national defense as well as give him certain powers to control credit. This is essential not only to rebuild our military machine but also to check a very real inflationary threat.

But this bill will not protect the American housewife. This bill actually encourages higher prices for practically every commodity. It is loaded with so many special exemptions through attempts to take care of the different pressure groups that it will just not work.

It is most unfortunate that with American boys dying in Korea and with our country facing one of its most serious crises that the Congress will not forget politics long enough to enact the proper legislation. Every Member of Congress knows what legislation is needed and all that is required to enact that legislation would be for the Members of Congress to forget politics and stop trying to buy the 1950 elections under the guise of a national emergency. I am sorry that we are failing so completely to cope with this emergency. There is no such thing as half control, it must be all or none.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As I understand the amendment, it would prevent automatic increases being made in various departments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. And stop pay increases?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Those are matters which we have already regulated by law. At any time further regulation is found to be necessary such regulation can be made by act of Congress at any time, or action can be taken in connection with an appropriation bill, or by provision for a change in the existing system. Therefore I bitterly oppose the amendment on the ground that it deals with what we have already provided by act of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I might say that the whole bill does a great many things that have been done previously.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have no desire to read the statement I have which deals with the amendment. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it. The "noes" have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator asks for a division a little late, but it will be given to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A division has been requested.

On a division Mr. WILLIAMS' amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to strike out title IV, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the motion before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is that of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to strike out title IV. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is unavoidably detained on official business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is necessarily absent.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are detained on official business.

So Mr. CAPEHART's motion was rejected.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I call up the amendment marked "8-11-50-R," which I offer. The amendment is offered on behalf of myself, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, in line 9, it is proposed to strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951"; on page 32, line 8, to strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951"; on page 37, lines 7 and 8, to strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951"; on page 77, lines 17 and 18, to strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. When the control bill was passed by the House of Representatives, a provision was added to have it expire on June 30, 1951. This amendment, if it is adopted, will make the Senate bill conform to the House bill.

I think this amendment is very important because at this time no one can foretell the extent of the emergency with which we are dealing. It may be much greater than we now think, or it may not be so great.

This amendment will give the Congress an opportunity to review this measure and to reenact such parts of it as Congress may see fit to reenact, or to make this measure stronger, or to do whatever Congress may think best to be done under the circumstances existing at that time.

I imagine that Congress will be in virtually constant session throughout the spring of next year, and certainly until June 30, although it may be that thereafter there will be a recess from time to time. The amendment will give us a chance to see where we are going—which is more than we are able to tell now.

I congratulate the committee for doing such fine work in a very brief period. Necessarily this measure was prepared in a very short time.

I think this bill confers on the President the greatest power ever conferred on a President of the United States in time of peace. I think the Senate should retain the right, under the expiration date now proposed—which will conform with that provided by the House of Representatives—to review the measure next spring and see what should be done further.

Mr. President, I yield 1 minute of my remaining time to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of the amendment. I wish to endorse everything which has been said by the senior Senator from Virginia.

Possibly it is because I am a member of the Appropriations Committee that I feel that reviews are very desirable in connection with legislative enactments and the regulations and controls which go with them.

If at the end of a year the situation confronting us is worse than is the present situation, certainly there will be no difficulty about extending these controls. On the other hand, as the distinguished Senator from Virginia and other Senators already have said this afternoon, this bill provides a great deal of power. If the bill is administered constructively, certainly a review would reveal that, and the chances are that then there would be no difficulty in continuing the powers now proposed in the bill.

Certainly one way to find out about that situation and to correct any inequities is to have a review made. The best way to provide for the making of a review is to provide a termination date for the granting of the authority and the powers. I insisted upon having that done in the case of the selective service bill.

I believe that at the end of 1 year is a good time at which to have a review made, and then to determine whether to extend the powers or to withdraw them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I have joined in sponsoring the amendment to limit this legislation to 1 year, to August 31, 1951, because I believe we are facing an emergency; otherwise no such legislation is necessary. I am of the belief that if we take this firm stand and prepare for any emergency, indicating to the Soviet Union and the other countries of the world that we are determined to prepare for the worst that could happen and to stop aggressions which may become a third world war, we may be able to stave off and prevent such a war.

I believe that if we limit the operations under this bill by providing that the authority granted under it shall expire next year that will make it possible for Congress to review the entire proceedings under the bill and to do so during the first part of the next session of Congress.

In this measure we are granting great power, exceptional power, to the Executive; we are doing so on the basis of the facts we have before us today. If it was only to take care of the crisis in Korea, we would not need these controls. We must be prepared for a greater emergency if it comes, and as it looks now it may come at any time; but we should look at the facts as they will appear after the next session of Congress begins in January 1951, and determine what controls we then need to prevent inflation and prepare for this national security.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I desire to support the amendment. For the reasons which have been stated by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and other Senators, I think it is important that we provide this restriction on the power granted to the executive branch of the Government. If that is done, then after we return, following November, we shall have a chance to review the operations under this measure.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia to consider making a modification of his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then, Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, to provide that wherever the date "June 30, 1951" appears in the amendment, it be changed to "August 31, 1951."

The effect of my substitute will be to make the bill a 12-month bill. I have had such an amendment at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wonder whether the able Senator from Virginia is willing to accept the August 31 date.

Mr. BYRD. I will accept it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. What is the opinion of the Senator from Indiana or what is the opinion of the Senator from Virginia as to the ability to obtain men to operate the central agency if the powers are to be provided for a short time only. Will it be possible to set up the agency in a satisfactory way, in such case?

Mr. BYRD. The bill itself provides that it can be terminated by means of a concurrent resolution. Certainly this amendment would not provide much more than that, because under the bill as it now stands, the powers could be terminated by means of a concurrent resolution, which does not require the signature of the President.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, on three different occasions the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] brought up the same amendment in the committee, and on three separate occasions the committee voted down the amendment. In some instances I think there was only one vote in favor of the amendment, and at other times I think there were three votes in favor of the amendment.

When we were in executive session, we heard from General Bradley and also Secretary Symington. They begged and pleaded with us not to tie the hands of those whom they might employ to work under contract for an indefinite period, perhaps 10 months, possibly less. We have gone as far in this bill as it is possible for us to go. If Senators will refer to page 82 of the bill, they will find this language:

> This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

We further amended it by an amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, to the effect that the Congress may annul ary section of whatever bill we may pass. That is the situation with which we are faced. By concurrent resolution, we can annul titles I, II, III, and so forth. The members of the committee heard General Bradley and Secretary Symington and the heads of various other agencies in executive session, who begged and pleaded that there be no such limitation because of the condition suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts a few moments ago. The bill, if passed, would for example confer the right upon the President to employ men from industry. We have given full opportunity to all who desire to be heard before the committee. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] himself brought this up three times. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CAPEHART. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was voted down each time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. MAYBANK. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator believe that, if there is no emergency requiring legislation of this kind, we should create jobs for those who might fill them temporarily, while we determine whether we need them?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, there were many amendments which I did not vote for, which were added by the committee. But if I did not believe there was an emergency, I should not be here tonight even to vote for this bill. The Senator knows that well.

Mr. FERGUSON. I join with the Senator. I would not be voting for it either.

Mr. MAYBANK. I want the Senate to know that the Congress can terminate any section of the act through a concurrent resolution, whenever it desires. General Bradley and Secretary Symington asked us to make the life of the law 2 years. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Virginia that the House did cut it down, but I am not certain that the House heard the remarks of General Bradley or of Secretary Symington and their reasons for asking what they did. I yield a moment of my time to the Senator from Alabama, if I have that much time left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a minute and a half.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I desire to endorse what the chairman of the committee has said. It seems to me there is a psychological argument in favor of having this control measure last for a period of time, particularly when we consider the manner in which it has been safeguarded. The committee included a provision which would give the Congress the right, through a concurrent resolution, to terminate the entire act at any time it desired. On the floor of the Senate we adopted another amendment authorizing the Congress to terminate any section at any time it desired. It seems to me that if we want to do a full job, psychologically speaking, we should go into this thing as though we intend to do it. The agencies cannot get started under the bill within the 9-month period proposed by the amendment. In addition to the inability to get people to leave their work and come here and try to get the program going, I believe that psychologically the longer period is preferable.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not about time that the Congress recognized some of the prophecies and some of the requests that General Bradley has been making over the past 2 or 3 years?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly think it is, and, as the chairman of the committee has so well pointed out, there was rather strong sentiment in the committee in favor of shortening the time, until we heard General Bradley in executive session. The committee then overwhelmingly and almost unanimously voted against shortenting the period provided in the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] as modified.

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the amendment, as modified, be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment, as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert "August 31, 1951"; on page 37, line 7 strike out "June 30, 1952", and insert "August 31, 1951"; on page 77, line 17 strike out "June 30, 1952", and insert "August 31, 1951"; and on page 82, line 9 strike out "June 30, 1952", and insert "August 31, 1951."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, as modified.

Mr. BYRD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are necessarily absent.

I announce that on this vote the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from South

Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] are detained on official business.

So Mr. BYRD's amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, lines 7 and 8, and page 60, line 2, it is proposed to delete "construction,"; on page 62, line 1, to delete "construction"; on page 62, line 5, to delete "new construction on"; on page 62, lines 5 and 6, to delete "or real property on which there is new construction" and to delete the remainder of line 6 and from line 7 to and including "1950." in line 10; and on page 62, line 13, to delete "construction."

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, these various changes add up to just one thing. This amendment authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to control credit over all privately financed real estate, and not merely over new construction. The bill as introduced contained such authority for the President. While my amendment does not propose to take the field from the Federal Reserve Board, it does expand the proposed power of the Federal Reserve Board in order to plug a loophole so transparently big that the proposed credit controls may be largely ineffective in controlling inflation in real estate.

It may be recalled that the President specifically mentioned this needed power in his recent letter to the President of the Senate regarding the bill. If the authority called for in this amendment is not included in the bill, I fear lack of credit controls over presently existing buildings will result in a severe inflationary boom in that field, as in the last war, should it become necessary to control credit on new construction. I think we are all familiar, Mr. President, with the issue involved in this subject, and I do not think I can contribute enlightenment by any further discussion on my part.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I appreciate what the Senator from Connecticut has said, but I regret that because the amendment was defeated in committee, I cannot, as chairman of the committee, accept it. I would have to oppose it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON]. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, line 21, at the end of section 402 (d), it is proposed to insert the following:

Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit ceilings designed to allow a seller his normal percentage, cash, or other margin of profit; and ceilings shall be designed to allow sellers whose margin of profit is normally determined by the application of a percentage discount, mark-up, or other basis their normal margin of profit so determined.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, an amendment, proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], adopted by the Senate in its consideration of Senate bill 3936, Defense Production Act, is of some concern. That amendment provides that no ceiling price shall be established to allow a seller a "margin of profit greater than his average margin of profit" on sales of commodities and service during the representative period.

The retail automobile industry operates on a discount basis in purchasing automotive products from the manufacturer. The manufacturer suggests a retail list price, and the dealer buys his motor vehicles at an established discount from that list price. This method of doing business has been established over the years, and prices have moved downward, as well as upward, during that period.

During the last war OPA, in several instances, authorized price increases to the manufacturer on the basis of increased costs, and the dealer's discount remained the same. In the latter days of OPA that organization attempted to reduce the historic discount in the industry. This was resisted, and the Congress in 1946 adopted an amendment to the Emergency Price Control Act preventing OPA from changing this historic discount arrangement, section 10 (q), Price Control Extension Act of 1946.

Should price controls be reinstated, and the governmental agency in charge permit the manufacturer either to increase or decrease the list price, this would result in an increase or decrease in the dealer's dollar income.

If the words "margin of profit" were construed by the Administrator, after authorizing an increase in the list price, to place a ceiling on the dealer's dollar return, then this would have the effect of lowering the dealer's historic discount. If the prices of the manufacturer should go up because of costs, then likewise the retail industry has also increased costs, and the discount should remain the same, although it would produce additional dollar income. Conversely, should the price of the manufacturer be reduced, the retail industry would want the historic discount maintained even though it would mean a reduced dollar income. Thus, it is not the dollar income which is important but the maintenance of the discount rate. The words "margin of profit" might be constructed by an administrative agency to bring about a change in the retail dealer's historic discount.

The amendment is made necessary by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware. It seems to me inasmuch as Congress once before acted upon this very problem and in 1946 passed the act, making this construction, that the Senate should adopt the amendment so that there will be no doubt about the fact that the historic practice will be approved and will not be the subject of argument back and forth. I suggest that the chairman of the committee take the amendment to conference.

Mr. MAYBANK. While I understand the desire of the Senator from Utah with respect to carrying the amendment to conference, I wish to point out there are still so many amendments pending which must be considered——

Mr. WATKINS. The subject of the amendment is pretty well known.

Mr. MAYBANK. The amendment was not printed. The Senator from Indiana advises that he has five amendments to offer. Am I correct?

Mr. CAPEHART. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Indiana has five amendments. There are several amendments that will be offered from this side of the aisle. I do not know whether the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] intends to offer his amendment with respect to title V. I have the greatest affection for the Senator from Utah, but, as I said to the Senator from Connecticut, I simply do not have the capacity to understand all these amendments that come in at the last minute. They have not been presented before, and I have not had a chance to read them. I should like to do it, but shall simply have to be firm in saying—and I speak only for myself—that we should not accept any more amendments which have not been printed. We have many amendments before us. Title V and title VI have not been reached, and then there is the bill itself. It is now 5 minutes after 8. I will stay as long as it is necessary to stay, but I do not have anything more to say on this amendment.

Mr. WATKINS. May I inquire of the Senator, the chairman of the committee, if he is acquainted with the act passed in 1946? Was not that act taken into consideration by the committee in drafting the bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; I am familiar with the 1946 act. As the Washington Post said, it may be defined as a decontrol OPA Act. In my judgment it was a mistake. I was very well acquainted in 1941 and 1942 with the act at that time. If we attempt to write an OPA Act on the Senate floor, I do not think we shall get very far. We have very many amendments before us. I understand the minority leader has five amendments to offer. The Senator from Ohio has an amendment to title V. I am not in a position to accept any other amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask the clerk to state it.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, at the end of line 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title, and the method of controlling prices shall be based on the historical pricing practice and experience of the seller.

Mr. CAPEHART. The first portion of the amendment is an insertion taken from the bill which was passed by the House. It is essentially in the language which appears in section 2 (b) of the original Price Control Act. If we adopt the amendment we would be adopting what is already in the House bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Since it is already in the House bill, it would be in conference. The distinguished Senator from Indiana, who is the Republican leader so far as this bill is concerned in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], would be one of the conferees. I trust he will not press his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no right to presume, but I suppose the issue before us is title V. Would I be incorrect in assuming that?

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator is directing the question to me, I would say yes. A few minutes ago the distinguished acting majority leader, the chairman of the committee, stated that the minority leader had five or six amendments to offer.

Mr. MAYBANK. I meant to say the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. The Senator from Indiana told me he had five amendments too.

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes; I have some more amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree that the amendment to title V is a very important amendment. I think we can have a quorum call and——

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate the fact that the Senator who rises and is recognized by the Chair has the floor. However, I wonder if we could get to title V, because I think several Senators wish to retire, or have other engagements.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest to the acting majority leader that we go ahead with the quorum call and immediately thereafter take up the four or five amendments. In the meantime, the Senator from Ohio will be here to present his amendment to title V.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I had intended to offer four other amendments which would simply clarify title IV of the bill, which is the OPA title. They are amendments which experience in World War II would suggest should be written into this bill.

I shall not offer the amendments, because I can see that the Senate will not accept them. All of which again proves that when we write title IV into the bill, which is an OPA title, and calls for the President of the United States to set up price control, wage control, and rationing, without holding any hearings whatsoever, and without calling in anyone who had any experience in World War II with respect to OPA, rationing, price control, or wage control, we are going to pass a bill which the President does not want—and he has said he did not want it and does not now want it—and we shall send the bill to the President of the United States and say to him, "There it is." I would say that there is not one Senator on the floor who understands the implications of title IV.

I am not going to offer the amendments. They are purely clarifying amendments. They are amendments which would have gone into the bill if we had had hearings and had invited to appear those who had had a world of experience in running the OPA and other activities. I am not going to offer the amendments because I do not believe the Senate is in any mood to take them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is out of order at the present time. There is no amendment pending on which a Senator may speak 5 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be waived.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will not be read.

Mr. CAPEHART's amendment is as follows:

In line 16, on page 43, before the word "Any", insert the following: "No adjustment of the ceiling with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation for any type of employment shall be conditioned upon an agreement by the person for whom such employment is performed that such adjustment will not be used as justification for adjustment of the ceiling with respect to materials, services, or property sold by such person."

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD numerous telegrams and letters I have received on the subject I have been discussing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In connection with the remarks the able Senator from Indiana has just made with reference to writing title IV into the bill, I suppose he would include title V, and the Senator would like to have the RECORD show, I am sure, that the Committee on Banking and Currency voted almost unanimously to include those title. In fact, as I recall, there was only one negative vote in the committee against including titles IV and V in the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I do not deny that what the Senator says is accurate, but I want the RECORD to show—and I have said it I do not know how many times on the floor of the Senate—that there were no public hearings held, and there were no witnesses before the committee, with respect to title IV, under which the very lifeblood of the Nation will be controlled. That section covering wage and price controls and rationing, which takes the people by the throat and controls their very lives, was adopted, without any hearing. Then the bill comes to the floor of the Senate, and numerous amendments are offered which Senators themselves do not understand, and we are going to send that sort of a bill to the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I am not going to offer the amendments which I have prepared, and I withdraw the one I have just offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Indiana has said about title IV, but the Senator himself offered amendment after amendment in the committee to freeze prices and wages.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I never once offered an amendment to freeze wages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of an amendment, debate is out of order.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understood the Senator offered an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdrew his amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. I rise to a point of order, and ask that the Senator from South Carolina retract his statement that I ever offered an amendment to freeze wages.

Mr. MAYBANK. Prices and wages.

Mr. CAPEHART. I never offered an amendment to freeze prices and wages. I offered an amendment to freeze prices.

Mr. MAYBANK. Naturally, I construed it, as did the members of the committee, as an amendment to freeze prices and wages. I say, in justice to the Senator from Indiana, that I did not hear him say "freeze wages."

Mr. CAPEHART. Of course, I never said it. That is why the able Senator did not hear it.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator certainly suggested freezing prices, on several occasions.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is an entirely different matter. I still maintain that the Congress of the United States should pass such a law the very minute the Nation goes to war. It would automatically freeze all prices at all levels in the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is not possible to freeze all prices at all levels without freezing all wages.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is the Senator's opinion. I think it can be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I move to strike out title V.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, because we are about to vote on a very important amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hoey	Maybank
Anderson	Holland	Millikin
Benton	Humphrey	Morse
Brewster	Hunt	Mundt
Bricker	Ives	Murray
Bridges	Jenner	Myers
Butler	Johnson, Colo.	O'Conor
Byrd	Johnson, Tex.	O'Mahoney

Green	McMahon	Williams
Hendrickson	Magnuson	Withers
Hickenlooper	Malone	Young
Hill	Martin

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is recognized for 5 minutes on his motion to strike out title V.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, frankly I do not know what title V means or why it is in the bill. First, section 501 provides:

> It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization * * * that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

That is merely a statement of intention. That is what we have done already with all the procedures we have had in connection with the setting up of mediation boards, mediation commissioners, and the general methods provided in the Taft-Hartley law, even without this title. There are methods prescribed for the settlement of labor disputes. I cannot see what is meant unless it is wished to go further and impose compulsory arbitration. Does the language mean that?

Section 502 provides:

> The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest.

That is what the present law does. In fact that is what the present law says. It says that sound, stable peace can most satisfactorily be arrived at by the settlement of issues between employers and employees through the process of conference and collective bargaining.

This is language which is difficult to interpret and which seems to me to be exceedingly dangerous.

On page 58 we find the language:

> The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

What does that mean? Does it mean that the President can draft the men into the Army as he proposed some years ago? Or does it mean that he can impose compulsory arbitration on labor and management in the settlement of their disputes? What does it mean? What is the theory of the language:

> And to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

We have set up a conciliation service. We have seen quite an effort on the part of the President to transfer that service to the Labor Department, to transfer the whole conciliation business to the Labor Department. That effort has been defeated by the Congress, I think, twice.

I read again:

> Including the designation of such persons, boards or commissions.

If the President is only going to fix wages he has full power under title IV to appoint commissions to fix wages, if that is what he is going to do. What are these commissions going to do that the Mediation and Conciliation Service cannot already do?

At the end of section 5 we find the following language:

> Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, and with other applicable laws.

There are many things that can be done which are not inconsistent. That language prescribes one procedure. Under it, apparently, compulsory arbitration can be imposed, or apparently any other procedure that is desired can be adopted.

Mr. President, I never have seen such a wide open grant of authority. I may say that this title was in the House bill. It was stricken out by the House by a vote of nearly two to one after a debate on the subject which was of considerably greater length than we can hope to have here now.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. As I understand, from what the Senator has said, title V either means something or it means nothing. If it means something no one knows what it means.

Mr. TAFT. Either it is a reaffirmation of the statutes we have, or it goes very much further and authorizes the President to impose practically any terms he wants to impose in the settlement of labor disputes. If it is desired to impose compulsory arbitration in time of war—and it is perfectly possible that such a desire exists—then it seems to me that purpose ought to be spelled out. But the language is completely ambiguous, and appears to me to have no possible justification for being placed in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee I will say I am opposed to any amendment striking out title V of the bill. Everyone will recognize that it is imperative that we do everything necessary to prevent any interruption of national defense production by labor disputes. This title can have tremendous value as an expression of the intent of Congress that price and wage stabilization and maintenance of uninterrupted production may depend in large measure upon adequate provision for settlement of labor disputes affecting the national defense.

Under title V a board or commission similar to the National War Labor Board, which did much in promoting peaceful settlement of labor disputes during World War II, could be established by the President. This board could consult with labor and management, call a national labor management conference, and endeavor to obtain a voluntary no-strike-no-lockout pledge from labor and management, under which labor and management would voluntarily agree to submit their problems to a board or commission established by the President after consultation with labor and management.

It will be observed that the title requests the President to consult with labor and management in establishing principles and procedures under these provisions and requires that any action taken will be consistent with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and other applicable laws.

There has been some question raised respecting the Taft-Hartley law. The subject was raised in the committee, of which the Senator from Ohio is not a member. I want it to be clearly understood that the committee had in mind that the title requests the President to consult with labor and management in establishing principles and procedures under these provisions and requires that any action taken must be consistent with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, and other applicable laws. It will also be observed that this title gives the President no legal or compulsory authority over labor or management.

I make reference further along in the statement to the fact that the members of the committee heard Mr. Cyrus S. Ching in executive session on August 14, 1950. I have a letter from Mr. Ching, Director, Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, from which I wish to read as follows:

DEAR SENATOR MAYBANK: Previously, I submitted a memorandum on title IV of Senate bill S. 3936 which expresses my ideas on the necessity of voluntary action on the part of labor and industry in the setting up of a board for the settlement of labor disputes in a wartime emergency. Title V of the same bill declares the intent of Congress to provide effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

I appreciate that my time is short. How much time have I left, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Two minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have not read all of Mr. Ching's letter. I yield now 1 minute to the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], who attended the executive session when Mr. Ching appeared, and then I will yield 1 minute to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I think it would have been very well if the Senator from South Carolina had placed the entire letter from Mr. Ching in the RECORD. I will read the remainder of the letter which the Senator did not read, as follows:

The same title authorizes the President, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. In my opinion, this language provides a sufficient degree of flexibility to enable the President to establish such machinery as the representatives of labor and management may agree upon for the settlement of their mutual problems during a period of national defense.

In order to insure the full support of both labor and management in the defense effort, it is essential that they participate in the formulation of the policy and procedures and agree upon the type of organization to be established to carry out that policy. Any attempt to impose any rigid requirements by law as to the type of machinery so set up would defeat the purpose. Again I emphasize the importance of having the highest degree of flexibility possible in this legislation until the time comes when it is deemed necessary to proceed in setting up an emergency board.

Sincerely yours,

CYRUS S. CHING,
Director, Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Mr. Ching stands highest in this country in this particular field, and in this matter I take his word above that of all others. If he feels that this part of the bill is necessary—and I know he does—certainly I feel that title V should be preserved in the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We discussed this question fully in the committee. The arrangement proposed is a voluntary one, on the order of the arrangment used in the case of the War Labor Board. Under this proposal, management and labor can get together, agree to a machinery, boards, and so forth, as a means of settling disputes and strikes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. What would be voluntary about the President's right to establish principles and procedures and to take such action as he might deem to be appropriate?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The whole concept under title V is that there is not to be compulsion. It has been said that this provision of the bill might be used to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, but such a belief is very erroneous.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 57, as follows:

YEAS—29

NOT VOTING—10

Cain	Gurney	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Hayden	Vandenberg
Eastland	Neely
Flanders	Taylor

So Mr. TAFT's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair advises the Senator from New Hampshire that it is now too late to offer an amendment.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT THE BILL

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I move that the bill be recommitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MALONE. That will be ample time.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MALONE. For what purpose?

Mr. TOBEY. I merely wish to offer a very brief amendment.

Mr. MALONE. I do not yield for that purpose, since I am moving to recommit the bill itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

PUBLIC DISTURBED

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, many of us are disturbed about this situation of rushing into controls, a public straitjacket before any international policy has been announced or adopted by the President of the United States, and especially we are disturbed about the type of administration to which we are giving full control of a bewildered and confused public. Many of us voted for economy in government, but we have never had any success with the administration in paring down the taxes during a peacetime economy.

There is little integrity in government—under the present administration—and public confidence is severely shaken.

Congress is within 24 hours of the Capitol at all times, therefore should retain its last vestige of control over the economy of this Nation.

In the opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada, in order to show good faith, the first thing to be done would be for the President to remove the security risks from the Government—at least to remove the ones responsible for our present position in world affairs.

SENATOR BYRD AND KOREA

If a genuine cooperative effort is desired, it would be very helpful for the administration to show themselves cooperative and open to debate on the Senate floor. This they have never done—it must conform to the State Department program.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia has said that if Russia declares war, we shall abandon Korea. We are fighting a battle to regain an area once relinquished, and which would be abandoned at the first sign of opposition from Russia—that is what the American boys are dying for in Korea according to that authentic information, without taking the time of the Senate to read the dispatch, I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MALONE. I trust the Senator is speaking on his own time.

Mr. LUCAS. Reserving the right to object, I do not know how much material the Senator proposes to place in the RECORD, but it looks quite formidable.

Mr. MALONE. I expect that some of it is going to be very illuminating, considering the lack of any coherent foreign policy by the administration.

Mr. LUCAS. Whatever the Senator puts in the RECORD is illuminating.

Mr. MALONE. I shall read it, if the Senator desires me to do so. But the time is limited.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not going to object, but we have a habit here of putting everything in the RECORD, it does not make much difference what it is.

Mr. MALONE. The senior Senator from Virginia is the father of most of this dispatch, and to me, has stature in the Senate which is very gratifying to the junior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. President, may I have an extra moment on account of the interruption?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot have an extra moment, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada be given another minute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada still has some time left.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada may have 2 minutes more.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, do I have permission to submit this material and place it in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. So far as the Chair is concerned, the Senator has permission. Without objection, he may proceed.

Mr. MALONE. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an editorial entitled "The Goal in Korea" from the Times-Herald of August 21, which states, in part:

In stating before the United Nations Security Council that any settlement in the war must envision a free and united Korea, Warren R. Austin, the American delegate, made it plain that the goal of American forces is to drive to Korea's northern border, behind which stand Red China and Russia.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial appear in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GOAL IN KOREA

In stating before the United Nations Security Council that any settlement in the war must envision a free and united Korea, Warren R. Austin, the American delegate, made it plain that the goal of American forces is to drive to Korea's northern border, behind which stand Red China and Russia. Mr. Austin didn't say that in so many words, but the implication was clear.

Before the invasion of the Republic of South Korea by the Communist north, the country had been split at the thirty-eighth parallel, and it hitherto had been the understanding, given out by both Mr. Truman and UN, that American military action would be confined to driving the Reds back over that line. In fact, the UN resolutions on the subject convey the impression that if pursuit extended beyond the thirty-eighth parallel that would be no less an act of aggression than the original invasion.

Mr. Austin, instead of making a positive declaration of intention, cast his statement in speculative and tentative form by suggesting certain questions to which UN must find answers. But he went on to say that Korea could not exist half slave and half free, or even one-third slave and two-thirds free. The only way to eradicate the slavery is, of course, by the military eradication of the North Korea Communist regime.

The effects of this policy are:

1. The United States has laid out a course of action which exceeds, and to that degree is in conflict with, the declared policy of UN to that extent, the United States has reduced to a farce the fiction of action by international agreement, as well as the whole concept of "collective security."

2. The military task confronting the United States (nominally UN, for American forces are supposed to be acting for UN) has been greatly enlarged. A limited assignment has been transformed into an all-out job of clearing the whole country. The cost in lives and dollars will rise.

3. But, even if this task is accomplished, the hazards confronting the United States will hardly be diminished. Rather, it is highly likely that they will be enlarged. On the northern border of Korea—if our forces get there—we shall be face to face with the hordes of Russia and Red China. This new line will be more explosively dangerous than the thirty-eighth parallel ever was. Will Russia tolerate American forces only 50 miles from its naval base at Vladivostok? Will Russia and Chinese Communists accept with equanimity the presence of American forces on their frontier?

Korea, like the Chinese box, which, when opened, presents still another box, and another, and another, confronts the United States with an endless series of problems and of risks. Mr. Austin's declaration opens up a prospect the end of which cannot be foreseen. Mr. Truman's original decision committing American forces to the war in Korea was a snap decision, hastily improvised. The Administration continues to improvise.

Let us all hope that, in feeling their way from one unknown to another, the improvisors do not cause the Nation to fall into another great war.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the statement by Senator BYRD, of Virginia, on the Korea situation.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BYRD SAYS UNITED STATES WOULD PULL OUT OF KOREA IF RUSSIA DECLARES WAR—SENATOR ASSERTS HE HAS SEEN PLANS FOR MOVE; AVERS PENINSULA HAS NO MILITARY VALUE

(By Robert C. Rollings)

If Russia declares war on the United States our troops will evacuate Korea because it has no military value, Senator BYRD, Democrat, of Virginia, told the Virginia American Legion convention in Alexandria today.

Senator BYRD said he has seen plans prepared for this eventuality and did not think he was revealing any secrets in making his statement.

Senator BYRD said the Korean fighting has done nothing to settle the situation that confronts us.

He said the war may develop into side-line wars and that the country is faced with dangerous inflation at home. He charged that Congress is mystified by the complete breakdown of the United States intelligence.

"I say to you the intelligence service of our Government should be completely reorganized," Senator BYRD asserted.

His remark brought loud applause from the several hundred Legionnaires assembled in the Virginia Theater.

Senator BYRD termed the intelligence service the "first basis of our defense."

He said the war Russia is conducting against America is a war of economic attrition. He said a dozen side-line wars may occur without Russia showing her hand.

"She need not fire a Russian gun or lose a Russian soldier," he asserted.

"We have committed ourselves to these side-line wars."

SHOULD CONSERVE STRENGTH

Declaring the time is coming when the democratic people of the world must fight those who believe in totalitarian government, he said that when that time arrives we must be strong. We must not let our resources be depleted in preliminary skirmishes, he said.

"The Korean situation has opened up the whole question of attempting to arm small nations all over the world, when we have no knowledge, no confidence that they will fight when the time comes."

Senator BYRD declared he does not believe the European nations can withstand a Russian invasion.

"To my way of thinking, the only way to stop Russia's march over Europe, when it starts, is to keep in Europe from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 American soldiers."

ASKS IF UNITED STATES IS WILLING

A round of applause followed this statement, and then Senator BYRD asked:

"Are the American people willing for an indefinite period to keep that large a standing army outside our continent?"

He termed the situation in Formosa critical and said six weeks ago the United States decided it would stay out but now it has changed its stand and has said it will fight the Chinese Communists if they attack Formosa.

He said in this event the United States might find itself in the position of having as an enemy a nation which had been recognized by the United Nations. He pointed out that the UN is divided on recognizing Communist China.

Senator BYRD's statement that fiscal solvency is the very foundation of national security drew applause. He said he had never advocated economy, however, at the expense of defense.

Senator BYRD charged that 60 percent of the draftees are rejected, about half of them for physical reasons.

He said "many of our boys are going to the Korean fighting without any training."

WOULD CURB REDS AT HOME

"If we are going to fight communism abroad, why don't we fight it at home?" Senator BYRD asked.

He declared 375 employees have been dismissed from the armed services for security reasons, and that 106 have been permitted to resign.

At this point a member of the audience shouted, "Lock 'em up, Mr. Senator, lock 'em up."

"I would do it if I could," the Senator replied.

"The Korean war will be a long- drawn-out affair," Assistant Defense Secretary Paul Griffith warned today.

Mr. Griffith said "the United States has sufficient men and equipment on the way to Korea to do the job, but this accomplishment will not come today, tomorrow, or next week."

Declaring the United States can expect a similar incident anywhere else in the world, Mr. Griffith said the Korean fighting "may be just the beginning of a series."

He defended Secretary Johnson's conduct of the Department and assured the Legionnaires "our defenses are in good hands."

"Nothing has happened in the Korean affair to indicate we would not be able to ward off an attack by any enemy," Mr. Griffith asserted.

AMERICAN LEGION SAYS IMPEACH ACHESON

Mr. MALONE. I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a dispatch from Kingman, Ariz., by Associated Press, dated August 12, under the headline "Arizona Legion meet demands ouster of Secretary of State Acheson," to show the public opinion of the administration to which we are giving absolute power over the American public. This demand was made through an official resolution adopted in their department's convention, that the congressional delegation work on the immediate dismissal of Secretary of State Dean Acheson, and, if necessary, his impeachment.

I ask unanimous consent to have that dispatch printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARIZONA LEGION MEET DEMANDS OUSTER OF SECRETARY OF STATE ACHESON

KINGMAN, ARIZ., August 12.—Arizona's Legionnaires demanded today the Arizona congressional delegation work for the immediate dismissal of Secretary of State Dean Acheson or if necessary his impeachment.

Delegates to Arizona's thirty-second annual Legion convention told United States Senator ERNEST W. MCFARLAND, Democrat of Arizona, and Representative HAROLD PATTEN, Democrat, of Arizona, to go back to Washington and press for impeachment if Acheson is not dismissed.

The action, unparalleled in Arizona Legion history, came late last night after MCFARLAND in a speech to more than 500 delegates stressed the need for forgetting our past mistakes in international diplomatic relations with Russia and other countries and concentrating on the immediate future.

At the conclusion of MCFARLAND's talk, Ed Gibbons, Los Angeles, editor of the anti-Communist publication Alert, and California State Senator Jack Tenney, who formally headed that State's un-American activities committee, called for the immediate dismissal of Acheson.

At this point the delegates jumped to their feet and shouted their approval of Gibbons' and Tenney's remarks.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the California Department of the American Legion has adopted a resolution, which amounts to practically the same as what I have just said with reference to the Arizona Legion.

This resolution by the California department also demands the removal of Mr. Acheson even if it is necessary to impeach him.

I ask unanimous consent to have this dispatch printed in the RECORD, at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALIFORNIA LEGION DEMANDS ACHESON OUSTER, BY IMPEACHMENT IF NECESSARY

SACRAMENTO, August 15.—The California Department of the American Legion called today for the ouster of Secretary of State Dean Acheson—by impeachment, if necessary—and also:

1. Outlawing the Communist Party in the United States.

2. Withdrawal of United States recognition of Soviet Russia.

3. Expulsion of Russia and her satellites from the United Nations.

The actions came in a series of resolutions adopted by the Legion's State convention.

The delegates yesterday heard two well-known retired military figures warn that the Nation faces grave peril from within and without.

Retired Admiral William H. Standley, wartime Ambassador to Russia, compared Korea to Pearl Harbor which he said was the result of our failure to keep our military readiness in step with our foreign policy.

POWERFUL ENEMY

Lt. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, retired commander of the Eighth Air Force, said we have the most powerful enemy that we have ever had. He warned against a fifth column more powerful than that which existed in Czechoslovakia before that nation turned Communist.

"It's time to call a spade a spade, a Communist a Communist, and a traitor a traitor," Eaker said.

Admiral Standley again expressed his belief that we will not have a shooting war with Russia unless we initiate it. He said he believes Russia feels she is accomplishing her ends without engaging in a shooting war.

FEARS INFLATION

He criticized deficit financing which he said is leading to inflation and depression just as the Russians wish.

"As I view our administration," he declared, "the party in power is no different, as to purpose, than the communistic party in Moscow. They are both making every effort to perpetuate control of the Government by their party. The difference is in method only."

Standley said the practice of appointing special ambassadors and representatives responsible to the President is undermining the regular Foreign Service of the United States.

"It is no wonder," he said, "that the President vacillates and frequently reverses himself on foreign policy and it is a wonder that any Secretary of State will continue to serve under those conditions."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Is this going into the body of the RECORD, or into the Appendix?

Mr. MALONE. In the body of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator asked unanimous consent that it be placed in the body of the RECORD, and, without objection, it has been ordered to be printed in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. LUCAS. I am going to object to all these things going into the body of the RECORD.

Mr. MALONE. It has already been ordered printed in the body of the RECORD; does the Senator desire to bring it up on a motion, to remove it from the RECORD?

Mr. LUCAS. Go right ahead.

Mr. MALONE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to say also that for 25 years the American Legion has been trying to secure universal military training. I joined with the distinguished Senator on the opposite side of the aisle in introducing a universal military-training bill in February 1948.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. MALONE. I ask to have these two dispatches appear as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The two dispatches which were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, are as follows:

VETS BACK UMT PLEA

Veterans' organizations here were quick to give their support today to the Truman administration's demand for universal military training.

Maurice Stember, State adjutant of the American Legion, declared:

"The matter should be given top priority on the legislative program of Congress. It is vitally necessary.

"The American Legion feels that universal military training is particularly needed now.

"We sent raw, untrained men into war. Had UMT been enacted years ago when we recommended it, those men would have been trained."

Stember pointed out that the Legion advocated UMT "practically since we were organized."

A spokesman for the Catholic War Veterans called attention to the testimony in favor of universal military training given by CWV members at congressional hearings.

It was understood that policy statements on UMT were in preparation by other organizations of veterans.

HARRY FUTS DAMPER ON UMT DRIVE

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 17.—President Truman today told a press conference he is fully back of a universal military training law but he won't press this controversial issue personally at this session of Congress. He indicated he is far more interested in other parts of his emergency program to meet the Korean emergency.

The President thus backed away from the UMT drive some 2 hours after Chairman MILLARD TYDINGS, Democrat of Maryland of the Senate Armed Services Committee introduced the administration bill requiring a year's service for 17-year-olds. TYDINGS made the pitch for immediate passage of the UMT law on a stand-by basis in an impassioned 2-hour speech.

VERY CONTROVERSIAL

The Senator warned his colleagues: "It is my candid belief that the countries of western Europe are far from the military efficiency required for them to discharge their job in our dual undertaking. In my judgment we may have to consider strengthening the ground forces in western Europe."

The bill proposed by TYDINGS was sent to him yesterday by Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, who said he was acting with full approval of the White House.

Truman told the press conference that while he has consistently advocated UMT since 1945, he had not requested enactment of the bill at the current session of Congress because he did not want to project himself into what he considered a very controversial issue. He wants other emergency legislation passed quickly, Truman said, and he saw no reason to clutter up Congress with the UMT deal.

MATTER OF SURVIVAL

There was no explanation for his okay to Johnson to ask for immediate enactment of the law.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, if the administration had not stopped the enactment of the universal training bill early in 1949, then we might not be murdering green American troops in Korea now.

I thank the Chair for his consideration. I assume that the motion to recommit is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. The Senator from South Carolina has 5 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask unanimous consent that, following the remarks made by the Senator from Nevada, there be incorporated in the body of the RECORD an editorial from the Wall Street Journal, as of this date, under the title, "A Party Bankrupt."

Mr. MALONE. Reserving the right to object, is this a request to place the editorial in the body of the RECORD or in the Appendix?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina yielded to the Senator from Illinois to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MALONE. Reserving the right to object, is this a request to place an article in the body of the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a request that it go in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. MALONE. I object.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I can read it within the 5 minutes, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The editorial reads as follows:

A PARTY BANKRUPT

Within a short time there will be passed by Congress a bill to give President Truman wide powers over production and trade; powers as great as those which Washington attempted to exercise in World War II.

There is hope and some possibility that President Truman will not have to exercise those powers and that he will be wise enough to refrain from doing so.

But the prospects are that the mere existence of the powers will result in their use, that the anticipation of their use will create the dislocations that the controls are supposed to remedy. Probably few will be used at first, but the first use will lead to others, and there will be repeated the very thing against which the American people finally rebelled in 1946.

When that happens we will no doubt have a group of Republicans smugly pointing a finger at the Democratic administration and saying that it was all the administration's fault; we had such a spectacle the other day when Republicans condemned foreign policy for which they were partly responsible.

At such time it will be our pleasure to point out where lies the responsibility for the chaos. Without Republican support and inspiration controls could not be enacted. Partly because they sought to use a war situation to gain a political advantage, partly because they were in panic, the Republicans plumped for this business before any need was apparent, and as the need grows more remote the Republicans can find no way to retreat.

On the other hand, it may be merely academic to put the blame where it belongs. By the time the situation which we foresee develops, it is not improbable that the Republican Party will be speeding toward oblivion so fast that it will be charitable to withhold another kick.

The Republican Party has no program; despite the valiant efforts of a few men, among whom Senator TAFT is outstanding; it can do nothing but improvise from day to day. That is bad enough. What is worse is that its representation in Congress lacks the intelligence and character to distinguish between expediency and principle.

It can do nothing but dig holes from which it cannot extricate itself.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Two minutes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois does not have the floor. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, a point of order. Mr. President, to keep the record straight—I so thoroughly disagree with the entire philosophy of the senior Senator from Illinois that there is no room for compromise or agreement. There is little integrity left in our Government—the public must be the judge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor, unless he yields.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not intend to yield, Mr. President.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, how long do 5 minutes last?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Five minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I shall not ask to have two more minutes. That much time was granted by unanimous consent to my good friend from Nevada. I hope this bill will not be recommitted. We have labored long and have done the best we could. Some persons think we have done a poor job in not having granted more powers, and some other persons seem to think that we have done a bad job by providing too big a bill for the President. I have faith in the President of the United States and the Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces——

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I refuse to yield. I have only one and a half minutes' time remaining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not have that much time now.

Mr. MAYBANK. How much time do I have, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Half a minute.

Mr. MAYBANK. I hope we can have a final vote on the bill so that we may take a recess and be prepared tomorrow to consider the public-roads bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. All time has expired on the motion.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is addressing the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I do not ask the indulgence and kindness of the Senate, because I think that what I shall have to say will find a responsive chord.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment has already been agreed to and no other amendment is in order. The motion before the Senate is that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be given 2 minutes' time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I hope that time will be granted the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I trust the Senator from New Hampshire, the ranking Republican member of the Banking and Currency Committee, may have 2 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Regardless of the fact that the Senate has agreed to the Senate committee amendment, the Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment and that he be granted 2 minutes' time to speak upon it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment:

Beginning on page 64 with line 3, strike out through page 65, line 2, and insert the following:

"SEC. 605. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded veterans under existing law."

I am referring to the specific directive to the President in the proviso at the end of section 502 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 as passed by the House on August 10. This proviso directs the President to preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

In Senate bill 3936, at the bottom of page 64, we find at the end of section 605 a proviso which is permissive instead of mandatory.

Also of value in considering a mandatory directive to the President is a survey of the relationship of the GI loan program to the total residential-construction program as made by the Veterans' Administration. The figures in this survey are provided in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 10, page 12418. The table appearing at the bottom of the first column of that page shows that the percent of private residential building financed with GI loans amounted to only 19.1 percent of the total private residential construction in the United States for the 6 months ending May 1950. The table also shows that the GI home-financing program was only 8.3 percent of the total new construction of the country during those six months.

These figures should be ample evidence that the preservation of the credit preferences of veterans would not be any undue burden at this time because the GI loan program is such a relatively small part of the whole. The credit controls contemplated in both the Senate and House bills could be imposed in an adequate and practical fashion regardless of the preservation of the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, at this late hour, bringing up an amendment of that kind might precipitate some debate. The bill will be in conference, and of course the senior Senator from New Hampshire will be one of the conferees. As chairman of the committee I want to say that I shall join him in trying to bring out the House version, but I hope the Senator does not press his amendment at this late hour.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator for his indulgence, and we shall join, hand in hand, and put this thing through.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TOBEY. It is a trade.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is always a pleasure to trade with the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is now on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9176.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I move that the House bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the Senate bill, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is necessarily absent.

I announce further that if present and voting the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is detained on official business and if he were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 85, nays 3, as follows:

So the bill (H. R. 9176) was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3936 is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MAYBANK. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. FLANDERS, and Mr. BRICKER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask that the bill be printed with the amendments of the Senate numbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask that the clerk be permitted to make the necessary changes of a technical and clerical character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUDGET AND ACCOUNTING PROCEDURES ACT OF 1950—CHANGE IN CONFEREE

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the request and suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the Chair appoints as a conferee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] in place of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] on the bill (H. R. 9038) to authorize the President to determine the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods and procedures, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF WAR CONTRACTORS RELIEF ACT RELATING TO CERTAIN HARDSHIP CLAIMS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 203)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the United States Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3906, to amend the War Contractors Relief Act with respect to the definition of a request for relief, to authorize consideration and settlement of certain claims of subcontractors, to provide reasonable compensation for the services of partners and proprietors, and for other purposes.

S. 3906 was passed as a substitute for H. R. 3436, Eighty-first Congress, which I was compelled to disapprove on June 30, 1950. It is said that the bill meets the objections I interposed to H. R. 3436. I regret to inform the Congress that it does not.

When the provisions of this bill are read in the light of the statements respecting their purpose which appear in the committee reports (S. Rept. No. 2052, H. Rept. No. 2782) and also in the RECORD (96 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 10124, 11224). I think it clear that they serve to transform the War Contractors Relief Act into a general statute of indemnification against loss on Government contracts held during the war years, and do not merely obviate what the Congress regards as "technicalities" that have arisen in the course of administering the act. It was this same undesirable purpose that mainly prompted my disapproval of H. R. 3436.

While it is evident that an attempt has been made to adopt certain of the clarifying amendments to the War Contractors Relief Act which I suggested, it is likewise evident that no attempt has been made to limit their scope to claims or requests for relief that would have been granted under the First War Powers Act of 1941 but for the termination of hostilities with Japan on August 14, 1945. Indeed, the committee reports negative the possibility of any such restricted interpretation of the amendments. The bill, moreover, would not preclude the reopening of an indeterminate number of cases that have been settled under the First War Powers Act or the Contract Settlement Act of 1944.

In the absence of these limitations, the provisions of the present measure and their legislative background are quite sufficient to accomplish what I consider to be a total departure from the intent and scope of the War Contractors Relief Act. I refer particularly to the proposed "definition of a request for relief" in paragraph (2), which greatly relaxes the existing requirement that claims be founded upon a specific application for the extraordinary relief which was allowable under the First War Powers Act, and to the similar language in paragraph (3) relating to the claims of subcontractors.

It was not the purpose of the First War Powers Act to relieve contractors because of loss, or to indemnify them against loss. On the contrary, that act authorized the granting of relief because it would assist in obtaining needed war production and thereby "would facilitate the prosecution of the war." In my opinion, the sole objective of the War Contractors Relief Act was to afford a basis for the continued processing of those relatively few requests for First War Powers Act relief which were still pending on August 14, 1945, and could not be handled by the war agencies after that date without additional statutory authority. I am plainly supported in this opinion by the legislative history of the War Contractors Relief Act, to which I expressly invite the attention of the Congress (S. Rept. No. 1669, H. Rept. No. 2576, 79th Cong.; 92 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 9092).

In the veto message on H. R. 3436 (H. Doc. No. 629, 81st Cong.) my position in this matter was clearly stated, as follows:

> I cannot accept the contention that the purpose of the War Contractors Relief Act * * * was other than to provide a basis for relief to those contractors whose cases would have been handled under the First War Powers Act if war had not ended. Had I believed there was a broader purpose, I would not have issued the kind of regulations which were promulgated in Executive Order 9786. These regulations were a faithful attempt to interpret the language of the act as affording nothing more than a statutory basis for the continued processing of written applications for relief under the First War Powers Act which were pending and undisposed of on August 14, 1945. * * *
> H. R. 3436, and the reports recommending its enactment, would radically change the basic purpose of the original War Contractors Relief Act. I believe that in spite of any administrative interpretation which might be made to limit the effects of the bill, its provisions not only require reconsideration of all claims originally filed, but might also be construed to permit reopening of an unknown number of cases settled under the First War Powers Act and the Contract Settlement Act.

I further stated that the net effect of a bill which would relax the requirements for filing notice contained in the War Contractors Relief Act and the regulations thereunder, permit the granting of relief beyond that afforded by the First War Powers Act, and exclude the finality of settlement made under the First War Powers Act and the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 "would be to write into law the principle of Government insurance against all wartime net losses incurred by contractors providing goods and services to the Government."

Endowed as it is with a legislative history that makes the fact obvious, it is beyond question that these comments are equally pertinent to S. 3906.

Some time ago I informed the Congress of my belief that it would be a grave error to introduce this principle of insurance against loss on Government contracts; its implications "are profound, both with respect to our finances and with respect to our free-enterprise system"; and it would involve "reopening the entire program of financing the war, with incalculable effects upon our finances." I reiterated these views in the veto message on H. R. 3436. Considering the even greater demands upon our finances necessitated by the international developments that have occurred since then, it seems to me that their rightness is not even debatable at present. I therefore adhere to them.

Aside from the matter of finances I should like to add, also, that I cannot subscribe to the notion apparently held in some quarters that legislation of this kind is required to assure contractors of fair and equitable treatment at the hands of their Government. The well-known record of Government contracting during World War II is, in my opinion, monumental evidence that contractors were accorded eminently fair treatment, by all known standards of law and equity. I am confident they do not expect, or want, the Government to now embark upon a program of underwriting the element of risk that is a normal incident of any contractual undertaking for profit. Such a program, among other things, would destroy the existing system of competitive bidding which is an integral part of our free-enterprise economy, and it would virtually annihilate any incentive to perform efficiently.

For the foregoing reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from S. 3906.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1950

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7941) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. It is my understanding that when the Senate convenes tomorrow at noon the time is not divided between 12 and 1:30, and any Senator can speak on any subject during that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No division of time is provided.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no reports of committees the nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, August 22, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

AUGUST 21 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Ordered to be printed with the amendment of the Senate

AN ACT

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, ~~That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".~~

~~TABLE OF CONTENTS~~

~~Title I. Priorities and allocations.~~
~~Title II. Price and wage stabilization.~~
~~Title III. Authority to requisition.~~
~~Title IV. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.~~
~~Title V. Control of credit and commodity speculation.~~
~~Title VI. General provisions.~~

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 103. It is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully to hoard any necessaries. The term "necessaries" as used in this section means foods; feeds; wearing apparel; automobile tires; containers primarily designed or intended for containing foods, feeds, or fertilizers; fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas; fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients; tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of the above-named articles and materials; and any other articles and materials the equitable distribution of which the President shall find, and shall by proclamation declare, to be essential to carry out the purposes of this Act. Necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this section when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time; (b) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time or reasonably required to furnish necessaries produced in surplus quantities seasonably throughout the period of scant or no production, or (c) withheld whether by possession or under any contract or arrangement from the market by any person for the purpose of unreasonably increasing or diminishing the price: Provided, That this section shall not apply to futures trading transactions on any commodity exchange or board of trade.

TITLE II—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 201. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 202. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders at the same time both

~~(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service; and~~

~~(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this Act, shall be issued whenever an increase in wages, salaries, or other compensation (A) would require increases in price ceilings established under paragraph (1) of this subsection, or (B) would impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling established under paragraph (1) of this subsection.~~

~~Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally.~~

~~Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials and services~~

~~comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living.~~

~~(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. From time to time the President shall adjust ceilings, and in determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950: Provided, That no regulation or order shall contain any provision requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the ~~District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.~~

~~(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by such producer during the first thirty-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed; and no ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the proc-~~ essing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

(c) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals (a) for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio broadcasting or television station, a motion picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

~~(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility;~~

~~(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.~~

~~(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.~~

~~SEC. 203. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.~~

~~SEC. 204. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.~~

~~SEC. 205. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any~~ obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 206. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 207. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in ~~accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.~~

~~(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this Act.~~

~~(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in ac-~~ cordance with subsection (a) of this setcion shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 208. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the ~~regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.~~

~~(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court~~

~~enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.~~

~~(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.~~

~~(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of~~

Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

SEC. 209. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 205 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 205 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not

~~more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge, or overcharges, if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdic-~~ tion. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

SEC. 210. As used in this title—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but without limitation, vacation and holding payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

TITLE III—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 301. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) where the President finds that all other means of acquiring or obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE IV—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 401. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or any agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 403. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 404. (a) For the purposes of sections 402 and 403, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to Act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of ~~the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act,~~ as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE V—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 501. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any consumer or real estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies. Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) Any rules, regulations, or orders for real estate credit shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans of like classifications authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any rule, regulation, or order otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans.

(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semi-durable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit, hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is now construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed ownership

Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 602 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 502. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

~~(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small business enterprises.~~

~~SEC. 602. As used in this Act—~~

~~(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.~~

~~(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.~~

~~SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies, which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary, and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for~~ and represent the agency in any case in any court. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 604. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 605. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 606. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC 607. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title I of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 608. (a) No act or omission to act pursuant to this Act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

~~(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder and that if any objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President or such person as he may designate shall approve or disapprove the request.~~

~~(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.~~

~~(d) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this Act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within ninety days after the approval of this Act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such~~ surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

SEC. 609. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 610. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 611. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 612. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 613. That no person may be employed under this Act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this Act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

~~SEC. 614. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1951, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.~~

That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as "The Defense Production Act of 1950".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities boyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. (a) The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

(b) Except as provided in section 403, the authority conferred upon the President under this section shall be exercised by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 102. No person shall accumulate (1) in excess of the reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation. This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in section 101 of this Act.

SEC. 103. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order

$10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that all other means of obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall promptly determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid promptly 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, without regard to whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000, in any district court of the United States, within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the President determines that property acquired under this title and retained is no longer needed for the defense of the United States, he shall, if the original owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, return such property to the owner; but, in any event, property so acquired and retained shall, if the owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, be returned to the owner not later than June 30, 1952. In the event the President and the original owner do not agree as to the fair value of the property, the fair value shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the President, one by the original owner, and the third by the first two appraisers; the expenses of such determination shall be paid in equal shares by the Government and the original owner.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SUBTITLE A—GENERAL EXPANSION

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense.

(b) Any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System at the request of the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, nothwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section, shall be subject to the supervision of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and to such regulations as it may prescribe; and the Board is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents. After consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the guaranteeing agencies may prescribe the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

(e) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities now owned by the United States Government.

SEC. 302. To expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises (including research corporations not organized for profit) for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be without prejudice to, and shall be administered consistently with, subtitle B of this title.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize such existing departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new agencies (other than corporations).

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303, and pending the making of such appropriations, any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section or pursuant to subtitle B of this title is authorized subject to the approval of the President to borrow from the Treasury of the United States such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title, provided that the total amount so borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $300,000,000 at any one time.

SUBTITLE B—METALS AND MINERALS

SEC. 311. (a) It is the policy of the Congress that every effort be made to stimulate exploration for and conservation of strategic and critical metals and minerals and other essential metals and minerals by private enterprise to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the United States, and that every effort be made to encourage the development and maintenance of sources of these metals and minerals within the United States in order to decrease and prevent, wherever possible, a dangerous and costly dependence by the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of such materials. To this end it is the further policy of the Congress that every effort be made to maintain a sound and active mining industry within the United States; to expand exploration for those ores and other mineral substances which are essential to the common defense or the industrial needs of the United States; and to prevent the discontinuance of mine operations under such circumstances as to make it probable that production would not or could not be resumed when needed for the national economy or security.

(b) In carrying out these policies small mining enterprises shall be encouraged to apply for aid under this subtitle, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Interior shall provide small mining enterprises with full information concerning this subtitle, and shall make special provision for expeditious handling of applications from small mining enterprises.

SEC. 312. A Minerals Conservation Board, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby established. The Secretary of the Interior shall be the executive chairman of the Board. The members of the Board may delegate their powers, functions, and duties, including those relating to appeals, to suitable officers of their respective agencies.

SEC. 313. To carry out the policy of this subtitle, the Board shall by regulation determine—

(a) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of exploration, on the one hand, and to the aid of conservation, on the other hand;

(b) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of exploration for any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, as specified by the Board;

(c) the amount of money to be allocated to the aid of conservation of any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, as specified by the Board;

(d) the maximum price or the minimum price, or both, which may be paid for the purchase of any metal or mineral for conservation: Provided, That adequate allowance shall be made for depletion and depreciation in computing costs of operation or maintenance;

(e) the maximum amount or the minimum amount, or both, which may be paid on account of participation in the costs of maintenance for conservation with respect to any metal or mineral;

(f) the maximum amount or the minimum amount, or both, which may be paid to any producer or class of producers on account of exploration for any metal or mineral or group of metals or minerals, and the ratio which the Government's contribution for exploration shall bear to the contribution of any producer or class of producers for exploration;

(g) the particular metals or minerals or ores thereof and specifications therefor that shall be eligible for aid for conservation;

(h) the particular metals or minerals that shall be eligible for aid for exploration; and

(i) the time limits or dates within which contracts for aid for conservation shall terminate.

SEC. 314. (a) The Board shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out its functions and duties under this subtitle, and to provide fair and equitable treatment for all applicants for aid.

(b) The Secretary, subject to the rules and regulations of the Board, may prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subtitle and which must be complied with by applicants for contracts under the provisions of this subtitle.

(c) The Secretary may delegate any of his functions under this subtitle.

(d) All rules and regulations issued under the authority contained in this section shall be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 315. (a) Any producer may file with the Secretary an application for financial aid in carrying out a specified project for exploration or financial aid to conserve a deposit of ores or minerals. An application to conserve may be either for aid by participating in the costs of maintaining the property in stand-by condition or by purchasing all or any part of the metals or minerals resulting from production from such deposit. The application and the project for aid disclosed by the application must conform to the express policy and provisions of this subtitle and with the rules and regulations of the Board and of the Secretary: Provided, however, That simple contracts covering exploration projects shall be awarded upon application to small base metal mines and such contracts shall provide for the payment by the United States of one-half of the total reasonable costs of all tunnels, shafts, winzes, and raises in such a mine if the application or examination discloses that there is a reasonable promise of developing unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals. All contracts covering exploration projects shall contain provisions for repayment to the United States of sums paid by the United States pursuant thereto, liability for such repayment to be limited to payment of a reasonable portion of profits accruing from production resulting from such exploration.

(b) The Secretary shall cause qualified mining engineers, geologists, and any other necessary technicians to make examination of and to report on each application, and to certify it to the Secretary either for acceptance, as presented or subject to specified modifications, or for rejection. In the case of a project for exploration, the examining experts shall certify whether the project offers reasonable promise of discovering unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals. In the case of a project for aid to conserve a deposit of ores or minerals, either by participating in the costs of maintaining the property in stand-by condition or by purchasing all or any part of the metals or minerals resulting from production from such deposit, the examining experts, considering economic and practical factors, shall certify whether the project offers reasonable promise of maintaining in stand-by condition or in production, as the case may be, a property the production from which would, in the absence of financial aid by the United States, be discontinued or remain discontinued under such circumstances as to make it probable that for economic or technical reasons such production would not or could not be resumed when needed for the national economy or security.

(c) The Secretary shall either accept and approve the application, subject to any modification therein which he may require, or he shall reject it: Provided, That if the Secretary's action on the application conflicts with the recommendation and certification of the examining experts, he shall refer the application to the Board; and the Board shall either confirm and approve the action of the Secretary, or shall reverse it, or shall direct the Secretary to reconsider it. Confirmation or reversal of the Secretary's action by the Board shall be final, and direction to reconsider shall place the application in the same status it was in before action upon it by the Secretary. If the Secretary accepts the application, either in its original or modified form, the terms of the application and acceptance shall be merged in a formal, written contract: Any applicant who is dissatisfied with the decision of the Secretary upon his application, may at any time within thirty days after receipt of notice of the decision, unless further time is granted by the Board, appeal to the Board, and the Board, as expeditiously as possible, shall review the entire matter, make its findings thereon, and notify the applicant of its decision, which shall be final.

(d) All metals or minerals purchased under the provisions of this section, or such equivalent quantities thereof as may be permitted by the contract with the producer, shall be delivered by the producer to and shall be received and paid for by the Administrator of General Services at such places and times as may be provided in the contract. The Administrator shall from time to time, and in any event before selling them in the open market, notify the Munitions Board of the inventory of metals or minerals held by him under the provisions of this subtitle and shall continue to hold all metals or minerals received by him under this subtitle until at least sixty days after he has given the Munitions Board notice that they are so held. The Munitions Board may, as long as any such metals or minerals are held by the Administrator, (1) direct the Administrator to transfer any of them to the national security stockpile in accordance with the provisions of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, as amended (53 Stat. 811, 60 Stat. 596), or (2) within sixty days after such notice from the Administrator direct him to hold any such metals or minerals listed in the notice until sixty days after the next succeeding appropriation for purchases for the stockpile has become available. Unless notified by the Munitions Board to either transfer any of such metals or minerals or to continue to hold them as provided in this subsection, the Administrator shall sell them in the open market if and when open-market prices will return to the Government at least the approximate average price paid by the Government for the metals or minerals, and only in such quantities as will not materially depress the market. No metal or mineral shall be transferred into the national security stockpile under the provisions of this subtitle unless the material has been found to be strategic and critical as provided in the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and meets established specifications as to quality and degree of refinement or processing, and unless such transfer is consistent with the current stockpiling procurement program of the Munitions Board. Any transfer of metals or minerals to the national security stockpile shall be covered by a transfer of funds from appropriations available for purchases for the stockpile to the Administrator in amounts, approximating what the cost of the metals or minerals would have been if purchased in the open market at the time of transfer.

(e) Contracts entered into under the provisions of this section may be entered into without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or other provisions of law prescribing the manner of making contracts on behalf of the United States.

(f) No contracts shall be entered into under the provisions of this section for a period exceeding two years.

SEC. 316. As used in this subtitle—

(a) "Secretary", standing by itself, means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) "Administrator" means the Administrator of General Services.

(c) "Board" means the Minerals Conservation Board.

(d) "Exploration" means exploration in the United States for unknown or undeveloped sources of metals or minerals, including undeveloped extensions of known deposits, conducted from the surface or underground, by surface trenching, core or churn drilling, tunnels, raises, winzes, or shafts, including recognized and sound procedures for obtaining pertinent geological information, and including metallurgical research on processes for the production of such metals or minerals.

(e) "Production" means the production of ores or minerals from mines in the United States, or from tailings, dumps, slags, or residues of such mines, which the Secretary determines would, in the absence of financial aid by the United States, be discontinued or remain discontinued under such circumstances with respect to each particular mine as to make it probable that for economic or technical reasons such production would not or could not be resumed promptly when needed for the national economy or security.

(f) "Small base metal mines" means mines or deposits of ores primarily producing or which in the course of conducting an exploration project primarily produce lead, zinc, or copper ores, or ores containing a combination of such metals, the average aggregate monthly production of which does not exceed 100 tons of lead, zinc and copper metal combined.

(g) "Producer" means any person or persons or legal entity by whom or for whose account and interest exploration, maintenance, or production is to be or is being performed.

(h) "United States", when used in a geographical sense, means the United States and its Territories and possessions.

SEC. 317. This subtitle shall not be construed as superseding or amending the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 755), as amended.

TITLE IV

PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 402. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under sections 708 and 712, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) Where the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders—

(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material, service, or property; and

(2) stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to or received by any person for any type of employment; and regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation, except when deemed necessary by the President to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of this Act, shall be issued whenever ceilings are imposed under subsection (1).

Action under this subsection may not be taken with respect to individual materials, services and kinds of property, but may be taken only with respect to materials, services and property generally, subject to the exceptions provided hereafter in subsection (e) of this section or provided by the President under the authority contained in subsection (f) of this section.

Wages, salaries, and other compensation shall be stabilized generally whenever ceilings on prices, including retail sales prices, have been established on materials, services, and property generally.

(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials, services, and property, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material, service, or property, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or property or by persons performing the services, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In stabilizing wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order. No ceiling for any material, service, or property shall be established or maintained which is designed to allow any seller a margin of profit greater than his normal margin of profit on sales of such material, service, or property.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection; but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials processed from raw materials, and particularly from agricultural commodities, in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards

Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950 and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 66⅔ per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. No ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the highest price therefor specified above: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity; and in establishing the ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the minimum ceiling prices prescribed herein to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall determine such minimum ceiling prices as he finds with reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest.

(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Prices or rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals for materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility: Provided, That no common carrier or other public utility shall, at any time after the President shall have issued any stabilization regulations and orders under subsections (b) and (c), make any general increase in its rates or charges prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, unless it first gives thirty days' notice to the President, or such agency as he may designate, and consents to the timely intervention by such agency before the Federal, State, or municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase.

(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials, services, or property, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials, services or property, or transactions, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title: Provided, That this subsection shall not be applicable to any regulation required by section 402 (b).

(g) No ceilings shall be established or maintained on products resulting from the processing of cattle and calves, lambs and sheep, and hogs, the processing of each species being separately considered, which do not allow for a reasonable margin of profit to each segment of the processing industry as a group on each such species.

(h) The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this Act.

(i) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) as authorizing the elimination or any restriction of the use of trade and brand names; (2) as authorizing the President to require the grade labeling of any materials or property; (3) as authorizing the President to standardize any materials, services, or property, unless the President shall determine, with respect to such standardization, that no practicable alternative exists for securing effective price control with respect to such materials, services, or property; or (4) as authorizing any order of the President establishing price ceilings for different kinds, classes, or types of material, service, or property which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use in the trade or industry affected, or have previously been promulgated and their use lawfully required by another Government agency.

(j) No rule, regulation, order, or price schedule issued under this title shall require any seller of materials or property at retail or any operator of any service establishment to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

SEC. 403. At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of Title I of this Act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this secton to any other agency or department.

SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise. and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 405. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material, service, or property, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 406. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material, service or property, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 407. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order relating to price controls under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this Act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 408. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation, order, price schedule, or wage, salary, or other compensation schedule issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title. The court may fix and establish a table of costs and fees to be approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, but the costs and fees so fixed shall not exceed with respect to any item the costs and fees charged in the Supreme Court of the United States. The court shall have a seal, hold session at such places as it may specify, and appoint a clerk and such other employees as it deems necessary or proper.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction, (1) to stay, restrain, or enjoin, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders relating to price controls, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or (2) to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision; and no other court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to do so. There is reserved to the courts of general or other competent jurisdiction, except in the case of protests under this section and under section 407, the authority to pass upon the applicability of such regulations and orders. Such courts of general or other competent jurisdiction may pass upon the validity of such regulations and orders in cases otherwise properly pending before them.

SEC. 409. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 405 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) If any person selling any material, service, or property violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material, service, or property for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material, service, or property violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period, or compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. If such action is instituted, or such liability is compromised by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages or a compromise under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material, service, or property acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material, service, or property to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

SEC. 410. Each contract providing for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys by any department or agency of the United States from any contractor, entered into at any time when ceiling prices are in effect under this Act for whichever of such fowl is covered by such contract, shall contain the following provision (with such change as may be necessary to describe the fowl covered by the contract):

"The contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for live chickens or live turkeys to be processed hereunder. In the event and to the extent that the actual price paid to the producers of live chickens or live turkeys purchased for the performance of this contract is less than such estimated price, the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents or fraction thereof, per pound."

TITLE V

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 503. In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and with other applicable laws.

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 601. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (hereinafter in this title referred to as the Board) is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 386, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 921), to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order Numbered 8843 (August 9, 1941).

SEC. 602. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the Board is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real-estate construction credit as, in its judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the Board are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this section or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the Board shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real-estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the Board pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the Board may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this section; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the Board as it may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this section, the Board by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this section to be registered; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the Board by order may suspend any such registration for violation of this section or any regulation prescribed by the Board pursuant to this section. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the Board in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this section, the Board may act through and may utilize the services of the Federal Reserve banks and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(d) For the purposes of this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the Board may in its regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, accounting and other terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section:

(1) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit, hereafter extended, which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

(2) "Credit" means any loan, mortgage, deed of trust, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

SEC. 603. Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601, 602, or 606 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 604. All the present provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters), shall be as fully applicable with respect to the exercise by the Board of credit controls under sections 601 and 602 as they are now applicable with respect to the exercise by the Securities and Exchange Commission of its functions under that Act, and the Board shall have the same powers in the exercise of such credit controls as the Commission now has under the said sections 21 and 27.

SEC. 605. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act with respect to loans on real estate made, insured, or guaranteed by any agency of the Government, the President may, after consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States Government, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SEC. 606. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, each commodity exchange, whether or not designated as a contract market under the Commodity Exchange Act, shall take all action reasonable and necessary to prevent excessive speculation on margins in commodities traded in for future delivery on such commodity exchange. For the purpose of this section, excessive speculation shall mean (i) speculative trading in a volume in excess of the volume reasonably necessary to absorb hedging trades, or (ii) speculative trading of a character which causes or tends to cause unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in price.

(b) In furtherance of the purpose of this section the Secretary of Agriculture shall, whenever he has reason to believe there is, or is danger of, excessive speculation in any commodity traded in for future delivery on any commodity exchange, inform the appropriate control committee or officer of such commodity exchange, stating his reasons.

(c) For the purpose of this section, "Commodity" shall mean and include any and all agricultural and forest products and byproducts, whether or not produced in the United States.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this Act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such manner as to assure each individual business in the normal channel of distribution of such material of its fair share of the available civilian supply based, insofar as practicable, on the share received by such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950.

SEC. 702. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but not limited to, vacation and holiday payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

SEC. 703. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary), and he may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) The head and assistant heads of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this Act, and the heads of regional or State offices of such agency, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this Act, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or to facilitate enforcement of this Act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act.

SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in this subsection, the district court for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the President, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited or willfully fails to perform any act required by the above provisions of this section, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year or both.

(e) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 706. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act. All litigation arising under this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 708. (a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this Act.

(b) No act or omission to act requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the provisions of the anti-trust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall be delegated only (1) to officials who shall for the purpose of such delegation be required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless otherwise required to be so appointed, and (2) upon the condition that such officials consult with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this Act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder and publication in the Federal Register thereof the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this Act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent

he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

(c) The President is authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act to employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof, as authorized by section 55a of title 5 of the United States Code. Individuals so employed may be compensated at rates not in excess of $50 per diem and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses while so employed. The President is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(d) The President may utilize the services of Federal,

State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(e) Chapter 15 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 292. Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives or of the Armed Forces of the United States), shall speculate directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or shall knowingly publish or disclose any information designated by the President as confidential for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. As used in this section, the term 'speculate' shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity. The President shall designate as confidential any information which would give any person an undue advantage in trading on any commodity exchange."

SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 712. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production (hereinafter referred to as the committee), to be composed of ten members as follows:

(1) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and

(2) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman from among its members.

(b) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by this Act, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs. Upon request, the committee shall aid the standing committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any part of the programs authorized by this Act; and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. Any department, official, or agency administering any of such programs shall, at the request of the committee, consult with the committee, from time to time, with respect to their activities under this Act.

(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and do make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

(e) The expenses of the committee under this section, which shall not exceed $50,000 in any fiscal year, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made.

SEC. 713. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 714. Except as may be otherwise expressly provided in this Act, all powers and authorities conferred by this Act shall be cumulative and additional to and not in derogation of any powers and authorities otherwise existing. Notwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provisions of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this Act or its application to other persons and circumstances, but shall be confined in its operation to the provisions of this Act, or the application thereof to the persons and circumstances directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 715. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate; except that any agency created under this Act may be continued in existence for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed 60 days after such termination. The Congress may also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate prior to June 30, 1952.

Passed the House of Representatives August 10, 1950.

Attest: RALPH R. ROBERTS,
Clerk.

Passed the Senate with an amendment August 21 (legislative day, July 20), 1950.

Attest: LESLIE L. BIFFLE,
Secretary.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

AN ACT

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

AUGUST 21 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950

Ordered to be printed with the amendment of the Senate

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

AGREEMENT AND PROTOCOL FOR FACILITATING INTERNATIONAL CIRCULATION OF VISUAL AND AUDITORY MATERIALS—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate Executive V, Eighty-first Congress, second session, an agreement for facilitating the international circulation of visual and auditory materials of an educational, scientific, and cultural character, and also a certified copy of a related protocol of signature, which were open for signature at Lake Success from July 15, 1949, until December 31, 1949. Without objection, the ban of secrecy is removed from the agreement and protocol, and the agreement and protocol, together with the President's message of transmittal, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of an agreement for facilitating the international circulation of visual and auditory materials of an educational, scientific, and cultural character, and also a certified copy of a related protocol of signature, which were open for signature at Lake Success from July 15, 1949, until December 31, 1949.

The purposes of the agreement are explained in the report of the Secretary of State which is transmitted herewith for the information of the Senate.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 22, 1950.

(Enclosures: (1) Report of the Secretary of State; (2) certified copy of agreement for facilitating the international circulation of visual and auditory materials of an educational, scientific, and cultural character; (3) certified copy of protocol of signature.)

House of Representatives

TUESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou divine spirit, who alone canst lead forlorn and faltering humanity out of dark and devious ways into the radiant paths of a brighter and better day, Thou knowest the deepest yearnings of our hearts.

We pray that we may look upwardly unto Thee, placing our hands in Thine and heeding Thy voice as Thou dost say, "This is the way, walk ye therein."

Grant that the chosen representatives of our beloved country may be blessed with clear minds and courageous hearts. We pray that, as leaders in a Christian nation, they may be fearless in meeting the demands of the most difficult problems and decisions with the claims and the confidence of the spirit of the Prince of Peace.

Hear us in His name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 250. Concurrent resolution for the correction of the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 2854) for the relief of Wade H. Noland.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCARTHY, be excused as conferee on the bill H. R. 9038, "An act to authorize the President to determine the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods and procedures, and for other purposes," and the Senator from Kansas, Mr. SCHOEPPEL, be appointed in his stead.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9176. An act to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. FLANDERS, and Mr. BRICKER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8594. An act to provide for the acquisition, construction, expansion, rehabilitation, conversion, and joint utilization of facilities necessary for the administration and training of units of the Reserve components of the Armed Forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BYRD, Mr. HUNT, and Mr. SALTONSTALL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3934) entitled "An act to amend the act of May 13, 1924 (43 Stat. 118), as amended, relating to the United States-Mexican boundary," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, and Mr. LODGE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NATIONAL BUDGET AND GOVERNMENTAL ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING PROCEDURES

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9038) to authorize the President to determine the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods and procedures, and for other purposes, with an amendment of the Senate thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DAWSON, HOLIFIELD, KARSTEN, RICH, and LOVRE.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, with an amendment of the Senate thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SPENCE, BROWN of Georgia, PATMAN, MONRONEY, WOLCOTT, GAMBLE, and KUNKEL.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize Members for unanimous-consent requests to extend their remarks, but in view of the legislative program before the House, the Chair trusts Members will not ask to address the House for 1 minute.

WAR RISK AND MARINE AND LIABILITY INSURANCE

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2484) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to provide war risk and certain marine and liability insurance.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended by adding thereto a new title to read as follows:

"TITLE XII—WAR RISK INSURANCE

"SEC. 1201. As used in this title—

"(a) The term 'American vessels' includes any vessel registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws of the United States and any undocumented vessel owned or chartered by or made available to the United States or any department or agency thereof and any tug or barge or other watercraft (documented or undocumented) owned by a citizen of the United States used in essential water transportation or in the fishing trade or industry, except watercraft used exclusively in or for sport fishing.

"(b) The term 'transportation in the water-borne commerce of the United States' includes the operation of vessels in the fishing trade or industry, except watercraft used exclusively in or for sport fishing.

"(c) The term 'war risks' includes to such extent as the Secretary may determine all or any part of those losses which are excluded from marine insurance coverage under a 'free of capture and seizure' clause, or analogous clauses.

"(d) The term 'citizen of the United States' includes corporations, partnerships, and associations existing, authorized, or organized under the laws of the United States, or any State, district, Territory, or possession thereof.

The proposal was designed for the purpose of aiding Arizona in taking an enormous share of California's Colorado River water. The strategy behind the Columbia River diversion scheme is to give Congress and the Nation the impression that California does not need its Colorado River water because water will be available to California from the Northwest.

This is a serious matter. It should be exposed and clarified in all details.

In my inquiry of the issue, I find that the Bureau of Reclamation is now conducting various studies on bringing Northwest water into southern California. I have a letter dated August 18, 1950, from Reclamation Commissioner Michael W. Straus setting forth this fact.

In his letter, Mr. Straus states that the studies were undertaken pursuant to congressional and California requests, directions, and authorizations.

"Further," writes Mr. Straus, "in this instance, a specific congressional resolution requesting this investigation is at hand."

He identifies this legislation as House Resolution 244, Eightieth Congress, first session.

This resolution was not passed by Congress. It was introduced in the House Public Lands Committee, at the request of the Reclamation Bureau, on June 12, 1947, by the late Representative Richard J. Welch, Republican chairman of the committee. The resolution was strenuously objected to by both Republican and Democrat members from California. Mr. Welch ignored the objections of his California colleagues and of his State, and forced the resolution out of committee with a favorable report.

That was as far as the resolution got. California Members objected to it on the floor, and it died.

Thus, I find no specific resolution at hand which authorizes the Reclamation Bureau to conduct the studies of the Columbia River diversion plan. Certainly, House Resolution 244, which never passed Congress, provides no authorization. California Representatives opposed this resolution in committee, and continued to oppose it until they killed it.

Mr. Straus mentions that the Columbia studies were undertaken pursuant to California requests.

So far as I can learn, the only so-called California request came from the late Representative Welch in the Eightieth Congress. He was opposed by his California colleagues, by the California State government, and by innumerable officials, engineers, and attorneys of California water agencies, such as the metropolitan water district of southern California and the Colorado River board of California, a State body appointed by the Governor.

Let me make it plain once again that neither the State of California nor any responsible water, reclamation, or power officials of California, nor the California Members of Congress, have in any manner supported or endorsed the Columbia River diversion proposal.

California has a water plan now being formulated, but it does not contemplate utilization of any water from the Northwest. This assurance comes to me in a statement from T. R. Simpson, principal hydraulic engineer of the California State Division of Water Resources.

Here is Mr. Simpson's statement:

> The Federal Government is presently conducting a preliminary investigation to determine the feasibility of bringing water from the Columbia River to supplement California's supplies. The (California) State-wide water investigation is only partially completed at this time. * * * However, on the basis of the investory of (California) water resources and estimates of ultimate requirements so far made, it is indicated that adequate water supplies can be developed and regulated from California's water resources, including California's right in and to the waters of the Colorado River * * * to meet probable water requirements of the State without resort to importation from the Columbia River.

From James H. Howard, general counsel of the metropolitan water district of southern California, I have received a statement soundly denouncing the Columbia River diversion scheme. The metropolitan water district includes Los Angeles and San Diego and 26 other cities and areas in southern California, with a population of nearly 4,000,000 persons.

> In advancing the Snake and Columbia River diversion surveys, the Reclamation Bureau is considering a plan that would take water away from Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. It is important that the people of those States realize the true sources of the scheme to divert water outside their State boundaries.
> It is a program that originated with, and is sponsored by, the Reclamation Bureau. The people of California are not parties to this proposal. California has no aspiration to any water belonging to Washington, Oregon, or Idaho, or any other State.

The lists of protests from California representatives and officials against the Columbia scheme is long and impressive. It certainly should give assurance to the representatives of the people of the Northwest that California has no part in, and does not endorse, such a proposal.

The facts of the matter are this: The people of southern California, at their own expense, have built dams, aqueducts, and canals costing more than half a billion dollars to bring their legal share of Colorado River water to their cities and farms. Southern California was awarded this Colorado River water in contracts with the Federal Government, approved by the Congress.

Now the State of Arizona and the Reclamation Bureau want to take an enormous part of California's share of Colorado River water for a fantastic, unfeasible project in Arizona. The proposed Arizona project would cost more than a billion dollars to build, and would mean a loss in interest to the Nation's taxpayers of an additional $2,000,000,000.

There is no Colorado River water available for this Arizona project. So the Reclamation Bureau, with no doubt, the support of Arizona, has proposed the Columbia River diversion. This, they say, would give California her vitally needed water, and then Arizona could have California's share of the Colorado River.

That is the scheme. California is having none of it. California believes that its legal share of Colorado River, if protected, will be adequate for California's foreseeable needs and California will fight to preserve those legal rights against any attack. California is not looking to the Columbia and Snake Rivers for additional water.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. POULSON. Is it not true, in in addition to the fact that we are not a party to any such plan, that we have also paid for all of the water which we are receiving and which we expect to receive? We paid for the aqueduct.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right.

Mr. POULSON. We paid for all of the facilities of the dam, but this project would be so unfeasible, impracticable, and absolutely fantastic that it is beyond comprehension.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Which project is the gentleman referring to, the Columbia River project or the Arizona project?

Mr. POULSON. The project would even be worse than that fantastic project. The Columbia River project would cost at least 10 to 12 billion dollars, whereas the Arizona project would cost only $2,000,000,000.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Of course, the engineering difficulties are tremendous, we realize that, and then, too, there are the great number of miles over which the water would have to be carried.

Mr. POULSON. Some 1,200 miles.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Sometime in the future it might be that such a thing might become necessary, but at this time California says that we want to protect that which we legally believe to be ours; we want to be sure that we get that which is ours and we do not want to have any type of scheme raised which will throw up a smoke screen and will indicate that California is trying to grab something which is far beyond her borders, across even another State, across the State of Oregon into Washington.

Mr. POULSON. Is it not true that the great Northwest has a great need for all of this power and water? There are great undeveloped areas of land out there.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. At the present time there is a great deal of surplus water going down the Columbia into the ocean, but it is so far away from California that the Colorado River water is the thing we are interested in now.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JACOBS. Of course, I do not know anything about the controversy between Arizona and California, but I have an interest in it in this respect, that I have a publisher in my district who publishes two large daily newspapers in Arizona.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Pulliam, is it not?

Mr. JACOBS. Yes, Mr. Eugene Pulliam. On April 11 of this year Mr.

exactly the truth. He had not talked the matter over with me at all. This was on July 1. He had introduced his resolution on June 12.

I think Chairman Welch, the Honorable Richard A. Welch, was one of the best-informed men on the West, one of the best and stanchest defenders of the rights of California we ever had in the House. I think he knew California both north of the Tehachapi and south of the Tehachapi and all the water needs of California. I do know he did mention southern California and spoke of the dry situation all the way south from the Bay of San Francisco to Mexico.

Certainly on the floor of the House on June 12 as shown by the RECORD, and again in the committee on June 23, showed he was distressed that the southern portion of California from the Golden Gate to the Bay of San Francisco was in need of water. That was in 1947 at the time of the worst drought.

Now, hear me. I want to disclaim any part in hatching a scheme, then or later, to drag water from the Columbia River into California or any place else in order to give my own Arizona claims for water a little advantage. I have had no part in that. I am sure my colleagues from those States know it. I do not know whether anybody else has or not; I cannot speak for them but I do make that assertion for myself and I am sure Chairman Welch had no such part.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of California. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that a group of Congressmen from California called on the President of the United States the other day in connection with a certain matter; and, much to their surprise the President, when he had finished the first matter, asked them what they were going to do about the water shortage in California. They said: "We are working on it, Mr. President." And again to their surprise the President pulled out a folder and went into the proposition of bringing Columbia River water to California in such a manner and with such remarks as to leave no doubt about his being in favor of the project. So the gentleman from Arizona is entirely innocent of any conniving to help his proposition in Arizona. The water is needed not only in southern California, but in the central and coastal valleys of California as well, and I for one am going to do my best to have our water supply increased.

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the gentleman. I am positive that even after we have gone further a hundred years hence to the extent of developing the great Central Valley of California to the full, as we hope to do—maybe not in my lifetime or yours, but as we hope to do—even when we have developed every drop of water that is available in the great Central Valley of California and prevented the escape of 30,000,000 acre-feet of fresh water through the Golden Gate, even then there will be dry acres within the Central Valley. I am talking now about the region north of the Tehachapi.

So I do not regard tapping the Columbia River near its mouth as a wild scheme by any means. That is what Dick Welch wanted to do in this study.

I am glad to hear authoritatively from south of the Tehachapi that they do not need more water imported, that they now have water rights and developments that will be sufficient including what you regard as your legal right in the Colorado River. I believe that that is true. I believe if California observes her solemn covenant in her Self Limitation Act of March 4, 1929, and stays within her limit of apportioned water, she will have enough south of the Tehachapi Mountains.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I am sorry. Let me finish my statement. I agree that California is entitled to about 4,400,000 acre-feet annually but you have contracts for much more water. The Legislature of California, obeying the behest of the Act of Congress of 1928, covenanted in her act of March 4, 1929, placed a ceiling upon water to be taken by California from the Colorado River, which amount almost entirely is 4,400,000 acre-feet of water under section 3 (a) of the Colorado River compact. Your total contracts for 5,362,000 acre-feet are far beyond your legal share. They are not firm contracts and the high court will not recognize them as such. I pray for a final and definite decision by the Supreme Court. Now, you are legally entitled to 4,400,000 acre-feet of firm water in California from the Colorado River but you have contracts signed by Secretary Ray Lyman Wilbur in 1932 totaling 5,362,000 acre-feet. Those are your so-called contract rights, but they are subject to being scaled down by law and they total more than southern California needs from the Colorado River.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA REPUDIATES COLUMBIA RIVER DIVERSION PLAN

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I would like to say that I am very sorry my colleague from California [Mr. HAVENNER] thought that anything I said in my remarks cast any reflection on our late esteemed colleague, Mr. Richard Welch. A careful perusal of my words tomorrow will show there was nothing in the world in those remarks except straight facts. I merely stated the fact that the committee had reported this resolution and that the House had taken no action on it, that the Reclamation Department of the Department of the Interior was using that as an authorization to make a survey. Personally, I am not quarreling with that. I just want the facts to remain very clear and plain. I cast no aspersion on my late friend, Mr. Welch.

Mr. POULSON. I think we all understand that. I know I feel the same way. I want to say to my esteemed colleague from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] that I never, and I know the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] never accused the gentleman of entering into any plot. Personally, if I were to make any accusation I would say it probably originated with Mr. Straus in trying to influence something along that line.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I want to join with my colleague in that remark.

Mr. POULSON. I may also say to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] that he is correct. It is not right to take water from someone else the water belonged to, especially until we knew they had completed their developments up there; therefore it was out of line for the State of California to do that because the water authorities of southern California have told us we will have sufficient water provided we get the water which we are legally entitled to in the Colorado River.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO REAR ADM. ROSCOE H. HILLENKOETTER, DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, Rear. Adm. Roscoe H. Hillenkoetter was born in St. Louis, Mo., in 1897, and was appointed to the Naval Academy from that State. As a midshipman he served with the Atlantic fleet in the First World War, and was graduated from Annapolis with distinction, twentieth in his class, in June 1919. Admiral Hillenkoetter made steady progress in grade, and was promoted to rear admiral on November 28, 1946. He has served in all types of naval craft, including submarines, and was the executive officer of the battleship West Virginia when she was attacked and sunk at Pearl Harbor. After the cessation of hostilities, Admiral Hillenkoetter assumed command of the battleship Missouri and was in command when the Missouri transported the body of the Turkish Ambassador back to Turkey, as well as on its subsequent Mediterranean tour.

Admiral Hillenkoetter has had a long and distinguished career in the field of intelligence. From 1933 until 1935 he was the assistant naval attaché in Paris, and resumed that post in April 1938 with additional duty as assistant naval attaché in Madrid and Lisbon. He served as naval attaché under Admiral Leahy in Vichy, France, until 1941. During the war Admiral Hillenkoetter was chief intelligence officer on the staff of Admiral Nimitz, commander in chief, Pacific ocean areas. In 1946 he returned to Paris as the naval attaché, and served in that position until assuming the di-

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY RETIREMENT ACT—RESOLUTION OF SYSTEM FEDERATION NO. 101, ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from Clyde A. Brittan, secretary-treasurer of System Federation No. 101, St. Paul, Minn., transmitting a resolution adopted by that federation, in convention assembled in the city of Spokane, Wash., June 28 and 29, 1950, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 3295, to amend the Railway Labor Act to make it possible for railway labor organizations to bargain for some form of union security. I present the letter and resolution for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SYSTEM FEDERATION No. 101,
St. Paul, Minn., August 24, 1950.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Attached is a copy of a resolution endorsed by Great Northern System Federation No. 101, Railway Employees' Department, A. F. of L., in convention assembled in the city of Spokane, Wash., June 28 and 29, 1950.

This resolution calls for support of Senate bill S. 3295 which has for its purpose the amending of the Railway Labor Act to make it possible for railroad men to secure some form of union shop.

We hope that you will give this bill your favorable consideration.

Respectfully yours,

CLYDE A. BRITTAN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

RESOLUTION NO. 7

Whereas the amended Railway Labor Act contains certain prohibitions which deny the railway workers the right to negotiate with their management for any form of union security; and

Whereas the Labor-Management Relations Act (Taft-Hartley Act) permits labor organizations under certain conditions to bargain for some form of union security; and

Whereas the amended Railway Labor Act imposes an obligation upon the collective bargaining agent to represent, negotiate for and protect the interests of nonunion railway employees without imposing any obligation whatsoever on a nonunion railway employee to pay his fair share of the cost of union representation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That System Federation No. 101 in convention assembled in the city of Spokane, Wash., June 28 and 29, endorse Senate bill S. 3295 and House of Representatives bill H. R. 7789 which have for their purpose the amending of the Railway Labor Act to make it possible for railway labor organizations to bargain for some form of union security, and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to all United States Senators and Congressmen of the 10 Northwest States through which the Great Northern Railway operates, and to the executive board members of the Railway Employees' Department, A. F. of L., and to the offices of the presidents of all the affiliated international unions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

H. R. 163. A bill to authorize Sacramento Valley irrigation canals, Central Valley project, Calif.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2447); and

H. R. 1662. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire on behalf of the United States Government all property and facilities of the Rainer National Park Company; without amendment (Rept. No. 2448).

By Mr. HUNT:

From the Committee on Armed Services:

S. 4029. A bill to amend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 2449).

From the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 8797. A bll to exempt property of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington (incorporated under the act of Congress of June 28, 1864, 13 Stat. L. 411) from taxation; with amendments (Rept. No. 2451).

By Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

H. J. Res. 334. Joint resolution to amend certain laws providing for membership and participation by the United States in certain international organizations; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2450).

STATEHOOD FOR HAWAII—SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE (PT. 2 OF REPT. NO. 1928)

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, submitted a supplemental report on the bill (H. R. 49) to enable the people of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, heretofore reported from that committee with amendments, which was ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 1928.

INTERNAL SECURITY—MINORITY VIEWS (PT. 2 OF REPT. NO. 2369)

Mr. KILGORE (for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. LANGER), members of the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted, pursuant to authority of the Senate of August 25, 1950, minority views on the bill (S. 4037) to protect the internal security of the United States, and for other purposes, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 2369.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, August 28, 1950, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2484. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to provide war risk and certain marine and liability insurance; and

S. 3724. An act for the relief of Maria Sulikowska Forbes.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. FERGUSON:

S. 4099. A bill to authorize the payment by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of a gratuitous indemnity to survivors of members of the Armed Forces who die in active service and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 4100. A bill to grant succession to the War Damage Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 4101. A bill for the relief of Alex Abdul Ghane Tassie; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 4102. A bill relating to contracts for the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other mechanical devices; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF PUBLIC LAW 734, THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 339), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of Public Law 734, Eighty-first Congress, second session, the Social Security Act Amendments of 1950, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the Senate document room and 20,000 copies for the House document room.

REVENUE ACT OF 1950—AMENDMENTS

Mr. FLANDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. HUNT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8920, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8920, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933, RELATING TO FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. FREAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2006) to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, with respect to Federal savings and loan associations.

which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950—CHANGE IN CONFEREE

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has advised me that he will be unable to serve as a conferee on the control bill, and I ask he be excused and that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] be appointed in his place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as a conferee on the part of the Senate the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] in place of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], on the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED OR PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated:

H. R. 3463. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Fletcher;

CONTRIBUTIONS TO VOLUNTEER FIRE COMPANIES

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Virginia may proceed.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, several months ago a Virginian constituent brought to my attention that the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the examination of income-tax returns was disallowing contributions made to volunteer fire companies, notwithstanding three definite rulings on the point by the Tax Court and one by a circuit court of appeals. On the 22d of August the Secretary of the Treasury sent a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, with whom I had previously discussed the matter. The Secretary said the Bureau of Internal Revenue would recognize the decisions of the Tax Court, and that contributions to voluntary fire companies, without which, of course, they cannot function, would be recognized as gifts to charities, which are deductible under the income-tax law.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I entered directly into the RECORD the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury confirming precisely what the distinguished Senator has said.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance for his fine assistance in this matter, because it is a subject in which every State is interested.

GENERAL MACARTHUR'S MESSAGE ON FORMOSA

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in the press and over the radio we hear reports of President Truman's order putting a gag on Gen. Douglas MacArthur's message on Formosa to the meeting of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Chicago yesterday. Such action is outrageous and will be resented by every American.

Apparently there are fundamental differences over Far East American policy between Secretary of State Dean Acheson and General MacArthur, but General MacArthur, as a good soldier, is obeying and carrying out the orders of the Commander in Chief as dished up to him by the bungling Acheson.

General MacArthur knows more about what needs to be done in the Far East to correct the mistakes of Secretary Acheson than anyone in the Truman administration. And the American people have complete confidence in General MacArthur's judgment.

For years I have been trying to find a way for General MacArthur to come home and make a report to the Congress and the American people on conditions in the Far East, but always I have been handed a lateral pass by the administration.

The present, in view of the war in Korea, may not be opportune for General MacArthur to return; but a radio address by him from Tokyo to the American people is definitely in order to clarify the present muddled situation.

The vagueness and complete lack of direction to the administration's policies in the Far East are intolerable at a time when our boys are fighting and dying in Korea. Only our faith in the rugged Americanism of General MacArthur buoys our hopes in that conflict. Let us hear from General MacArthur, and woe to him who dares say he shall not speak.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. Under the unanimous-consent agreement under which we are proceeding at this time, debate is not in order.

2d Session } { No. 3042

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

August 31, 1950.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. Spence, from the committee of conference, submitted the following

CONFERENCE REPORT

[To accompany H. R. 9176]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".

Title VII. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

Sec. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. In order to prevent hoarding, no person shall accumulate (1) in excess of the reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation. This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in section 101 of this Act.

SEC. 103. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. (a) Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that all other means of obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall promptly determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid promptly 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, without regard to whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000, in any district court of the United States, within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

(b) Whenever the President determines that any real property acquired under this title and retained is no longer needed for the defense of the United States, he shall, if the original owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, return such property to the owner. In the event the President and the original owner do not agree as to the fair value of the property, the fair value shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the President, one by the original owner, and the third by the first two appraisers; the expenses of such determination shall be paid in equal shares by the Government and the original owner.

(c) Whenever the need for the national defense of any personal property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President, and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To expedite production and deliveries or services to aid in carrying out Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises (including research corporations not organized for profit) for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling, and no agricultural commodity shall be sold for such purposes at less than the higher of the following: (i) the current market price for such commodity, or (ii) the minimum sale price established for agricultural commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress.

(b) Subject to the limitations in subsection (a), purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under such subsection may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

(d) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by the United States Government, and to install Government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by private persons.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize such existing departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new agencies (other than corporations).

(b) Any agency created under this section, and any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under sections 302 and 303: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $600,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this subsection, the borrower may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at its option before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of obligations hereunder.

(c) In addition to the sums authorized to be borrowed under subsection (b), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303, such sums, not in excess of $1,400,000,000, as may be necessary therefor.

TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 402. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under section 708, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) (1) To the extent that the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service, and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

(2) Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. A ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (i) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (ii) such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense, (iii) the imposition of such ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, (iv) it is practicable and feasible to impose such ceiling, and (v) such ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of such material or service and to sellers and buyers of related or competitive materials and services.

(3) Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material, or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

(4) Whenever ceilings on prices have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living, the President (i) shall impose ceilings on prices and services generally, and (ii) shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation generally.

(5) In stabilizing wages under paragraph (3) of this subsection, the President shall issue regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling.

(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order. The President, in establishing and adjusting ceilings with respect to materials and services, and in stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, and other compensation, shall make such adjustments as he deems necessary to prevent or correct hardships or inequities.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection; but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 66⅔ per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. No ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the highest price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity; and in establishing the ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Prices or rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals for (a) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility: Provided, That no common carrier or other public utility shall at any time after the President shall have issued any stabilization regulations and orders under subsection (b) make any increase in its charges for property or services sold by it for resale to the public, for which application is filed after the date of issuance of such stabilization regulations and orders, before the Federal, State or Municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase, unless it first gives 30 days' notice to the President, or such agency as he may designate, and consents to the timely intervention by such agency before the Federal, State or Municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase;

(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

(g) The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

(h) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) as authorizing the elimination or any restriction of the use of trade and brand names; (2) as authorizing the President to require the grade labeling of any materials; (3) as authorizing the President to standardize any materials or services, unless the President shall determine, with respect to such standardization, that no practicable alternative exists for securing effective price control with respect to such materials or services; or (4) as authorizing any order of the President establishing price ceilings for different kinds, classes, or types of material or service which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use in the trade or industry affected, or have previously been promulgated and their use lawfully required by another Government agency.

(i) No rule, regulation, or order issued under this title shall require any seller of materials at retail to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

SEC. 403. At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of Title I of this Act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department.

SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 405. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 406. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 407. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order relating to price controls under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of this Act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

Sec. 408. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

(e) (1) Within thirty days after arraignment, or such additional time as the court may allow for good cause shown, in any criminal proceeding, and within five days after judgment in any civil or criminal proceeding, brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving alleged violation of any provision of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, the defendant may apply to the court in which the proceeding is pending for leave to file in the Emergency Court of Appeals a complaint against the President setting forth objections to the validity of any provision which the defendant is alleged to have violated or conspired to violate. The court in which the proceeding is pending shall grant such leave with respect to any objection which it finds is made in good faith and with respect to which it finds there is reasonable and substantial excuse for the defendant's failure to present such objection in a protest filed in accordance with section 407 of this title. Upon the filing of a complaint pursuant to and within thirty days from the granting of such leave, the Emergency Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside in whole or in part the provision of the regulation or order complained of or to dismiss the complaint. The court may authorize the introduction of evidence, either to the President or directly to the court, in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall be applicable with respect to any proceeding instituted in accordance with this subsection.

(2) In any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving an alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the court shall stay the proceeding—

(i) during the period within which a complaint may be filed in the Emergency Court of Appeals pursuant to leave granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision;

(ii) during the pendency of any protest properly filed by the defendant under section 407 of this title prior to the institution of the proceeding under section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, setting forth objections to the validity of such provision which the court finds to have been made in good faith; and

(iii) during the pendency of any judicial proceeding instituted by the defendant under this section with respect to such protest or instituted by the defendant under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision, and until the expiration of the time allowed in this section for the taking of further proceedings with respect thereto.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, stays shall be granted thereunder in civil proceedings only after judgment and upon application made within five days after judgment. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, in the case of a proceeding under section 409 (a) or 706 (a) of this Act the court granting a stay under this paragraph shall issue a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining or restraining, during the period of the stay, violations by the defendant of any provision of the regulation or order involved in the proceeding. If any provision of a regulation or order is determined to be invalid by judgment of the Emergency Court of Appeals which has become effective in accordance with section 408 (b) of this title, any proceeding pending in any court shall be dismissed, and any judgment in such proceeding vacated, to the extent that such proceeding or judgment is based upon violation of such provision. Except as provided in this subsection, the pendency of any protest under section 407 of this title, or judicial proceeding under this section, shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code; nor, except as provided in this subsection, shall any retroactive effect be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation or order issued under this title.

Sec. 409. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 405 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period, or compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. If such action is instituted, or such liability is compromised by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages, or a compromise, under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered, or prior to such compromise. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

Sec. 410. Each contract providing for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys by any department or agency of the United States from any contractor, entered into at any time when ceiling prices are in effect under this Act for whichever of such fowl is covered by such contract, shall contain the following provision (with such change as may be necessary to describe the fowl covered by the contract):

"The contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for live chickens or live turkeys to be processed hereunder. In the event and to the extent that the actual price paid to the producers of live chickens or live turkeys purchased for the performance of this contract is less than such estimated price, the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents or fraction thereof, per pound."

TITLE V

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. To this end, the President is authorized (1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent government and the public, and (2) subject to the provisions of section 503, to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. The President may designate such persons or agencies as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 503. In any such conference, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. No action inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or with other applicable laws shall be taken under this title.

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

This title authorizes the regulation of consumer credit and real estate construction credit only.

SEC. 601. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 386, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 921), to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order Numbered 8843 (August 9, 1941) until such time as the President determines that the exercise of such controls is no longer necessary, but in no event beyond the date on which this section terminates.

SEC. 602. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this section or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for themaintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any real estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this section; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this section, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this section to be registered; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration for violation of this section or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this section, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(d) For the purposes of this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, accounting, and other terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section:

(1) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

(2) "Credit" means any loan, mortgage, deed of trust, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

Sec. 603. Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601 or 602 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Sec. 604. All the present provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters), shall be as fully applicable with respect to the exercise by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System of credit controls under section 601 as they are now applicable with respect to the exercise by the Securities and Exchange Commission of its functions under that Act, and the Board shall have the same powers in the exercise of such credit controls as the Commission now has under the said sections 21 and 27.

Sec. 605. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act the President may at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States Government, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this Act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a significant dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such a manner as to make available, so far as practicable, for business and various segments thereof in the normal channel of distribution of such material, a fair share of the available civilian supply based, so far as practicable, on the share received by such business under normal conditions during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950, and having due regard to the needs of new businesses.

SEC. 702. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but not limited to, vacation and holiday payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

SEC. 703. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary), and he may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) The head and assistant heads of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this Act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this Act, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or to facilitate enforcement of this Act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act.

SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in this subsection, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the President, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited or willfully fails to perform any act required by the above provisions of this section, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year or both.

(e) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 706. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this Act, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act. All litigation arising under this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 708. (a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this Act.

(b) No act or omission to act pursuant to this Act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall be delegated only (1) to officials who shall for the purpose of such delegation be required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless otherwise required to be so appointed, and (2) upon the condition that such officials consult with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder, and (3) upon the condition that such officials obtain the approval of the Attorney General to any request thereunder before making the request. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this Act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

(e) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this Act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within ninety days after the approval of this Act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this Act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

(c) The President is authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act to employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof, as authorized by section 55a of title 5 of the United States Code. Individuals so employed may be compensated at rates not in excess of $50 per diem and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses while so employed. The President is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections

281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(d) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(e) Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives), receives, by virtue of his office or employment, confidential information, and (1) uses such information in speculating directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or (2) discloses such information for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. As used in this section, the term "speculate" shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity.

SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 712. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production (hereinafter referred to as the committee), to be composed of ten members as follows:

(1) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and

(2) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members, one of whom shall be a member of the Senate and the other a member of the House of Representatives.

(b) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by this Act, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs. Upon request, the committee shall aid the standing committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any part of the programs authorized by this Act; and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. Any department, official, or agency administering any of such programs shall, at the request of the committee, consult with the committee, from time to time, with respect to their activities under this Act.

(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena (to be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the committee) or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

(e) The expenses of the committee under this section, which shall not exceed $50,000 in any fiscal year, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the Senate in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made without regard to any other provision of law.

SEC. 713. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 714. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 715. That no person may be employed under this Act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this Act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

Sec. 716. (a) Titles I, II, III, and VII of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, but such titles shall be effective after June 30, 1951 only to the extent necessary to aid in carrying out contracts relating to the national defense entered into by the Government prior to July 1, 1951.

(b) Titles IV, V, and VI of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1951.

(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing—

(1) The Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may terminate this Act prior to the termination otherwise provided therefor.

(2) The Congress may also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate prior to the termination otherwise provided therefor.

(3) Any agency created under this Act may be continued in existence for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed six months after the termination of the provision authorizing the creation of such agency.

(d) The termination of any section of this Act, or of any agency or corporation utilized under this Act, shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, guarantee, commitment or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The conferees have agreed to a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. Except for clarifying, clerical, and minor changes, the differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed to in conference are explained below.

Title I—Priorities and Allocations

ADMINISTRATION OF PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS POWERS

Section 101 of both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the President to assign priorities and allocate materials and facilities to promote the national defense. Under the House bill the President could delegate this authority to any officer or agency of the Government, but the Senate amendment provided that, with certain exceptions, this power should be exercised by the Secretary of Commerce. The conference substitute follows the language of the House bill.

The conferees assume that, so far as practicable, in carrying out this section the President will not delegate the authority therein granted with respect to any one basic commodity except to a single agency of the Government. The conferees further assume that if the President makes extensive use of his powers under this title he will designate an existing agency, or establish a new agency, to coordinate the activities of all Federal agencies under the bill.

ANTIHOARDING PROVISIONS

Section 103 of the House bill, based on a provision of the Lever Act of World War I (40 Stat. 276), provided that any person who hoarded "necessaries" (defined to include foods, feeds, fertilizers, automobile tires, and other specified commodities plus other unspecified commodities to be designated by the President) should be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. Section 102 of the Senate amendment, designed to accomplish the same purpose, subjected to the same penalty any person who accumulates (1) in excess of the reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials designated by the President as scarce or the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The conference substitute (sec. 102) follows the language of the Senate amendment, except that the phrase "reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption" is changed to read "reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption", and an introductory phrase "In order to prevent hoarding" is included in the section.

Title II—Authority to Requisition

[Title III of House bill; title II of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

SUITS IN DISTRICT COURTS

The House bill provided that a suit by the owner of any property requisitioned under the bill to recover just compensation for the property may be brought in the Court of Claims or, if the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any Federal district court. The Senate amendment provided that such a suit may be brought in any Federal district court, regardless of whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000. The House recedes.

RETURN OF REQUISITIONED PROPERTY

The House bill and the Senate amendment contained different provisions with respect to returning requisitioned propery to the original owner, upon payment by him of its fair value, after it is no longer needed. The principal differences were: (1) the House bill required such a return "to the extent feasible and practicable", but the Senate amendment contained no such qualifying language; (2) the House bill provided that the fair value of the property should be determined by the President, but the Senate amendment provided that a dispute between the President and the owner as to fair value should be settled by arbitration; (3) the House bill exempted fungibles and property valued at less than $1,000 from this requirement; and (4) the Senate amendment required that the property be returned not later than June 30, 1952. The conference substitute retains the provisions of the Senate amendment as to real property (except that the June 30, 1952, deadline is eliminated), and the provisions of the House bill as to personal property.

Title III—Expansion of Productive Capacity and Supply

[Title IV of House bill, title III of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

GUARANTEES

Section 401 of the House bill authorized any Federal agency "engaged in procurement" to guarantee financing institutions against losses incurred in financing contracts and other operations "related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or any agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense." The corresponding section (301) of the Senate amendment (retained in the conference substitute) authorizes any Federal agency "engaged in procurement for the national defense" to make similar guarantees with respect to contracts and other operations "necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of material or the performance of services for the national defense."

GOVERNMENT INSTALLATION OF EQUIPMENT

The Senate amendment contained a provision which authorized the President, when in his judgment it would aid the national defense, to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or make improvements to plants, factories and other industrial facilities owned by the Government. No similar provision was included in the House bill. The conference substitute contains this provision of the Senate amendment and in addition permits the installation of Government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other facilities owned by private persons.

LOANS FOR EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY

To assist in carrying out the objectives of the act the House bill contained authority for the President to make provision for loans to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic metals and materials. The Senate amendment contained similar authority for the purpose of expediting production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or for the performance of services for the national defense. Under the Senate amendment such loan authority was also broadened to include loans for research corporations not organized for profit. The conference substitute retains these provisions of the Senate amendment, except that the words "under Government contracts" are changed to "to aid in carrying out Government contracts" to make it clear that this authority extends to subcontracts and related operations.

PURCHASE AUTHORITY FOR METALS, MINERALS, AND OTHER RAW MATERIALS

In the House bill authority was given to the President to make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or resale. The Senate amendment included a similar provision and in addition provided for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals. This additional provision is retained in the conference substitute but it is clearly understood that the use of the word "encouragement" is not intended to interfere with the regular Government operations of the Bureau of Mines. Provision was further made excluding purchases for resale of agricultural commodities except for industrial uses or stockpiling. The conference substitute adopts the language of the Senate amendment but provision is further made that no agricultural commodity shall be sold under the authority of this section at less than (1) the current market price or (2) the minimum sale price for agricultural commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439 of the Eighty-first Congress.

The Senate amendment added a new subsection (b) to this section which removed the procurement restrictions of other laws and gave authority to the President to make advance payments and prescribe other terms and conditions deemed necessary. Provision was made for payments in excess of current market prices but such payments would be confined to cases in which the supply of essential materials could not be increased at lower prices or in which the purchases were necessary to assure availability to the United States of overseas supplies. The conference substitute retains this provision of the Senate amendment with the addition of language to make clear that the authority granted by this subsection is subject to the limitations outlined in the above paragraph.

NEW CORPORATIONS

The House bill authorized the President to create new corporations for the purposes of sections 402 and 403. The Senate amendment authorized the creation of new agencies, but not corporations, for the purposes of sections 302 and 303 (the corresponding sections of the Senate amendment). The conference substitute contains the language of the Senate amendment.

BORROWING POWER

The House bill authorized corporations established or utilized for the purposes of sections 402 and 403 to borrow money from the Treasury to carry out their functions under the title, but provided that the total amount so borrowed should not exceed $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. The Senate amendment provided that, pending the making of appropriations for the purposes of sections 302 and 303, agencies or corporations utilized for the purposes of such sections or subtitle B (a provision of the Senate amendment which related to the development of metals and minerals, and is not included in the conference substitute) could borrow up to $300,000,000 at any one time to carry out their functions under the title. The conference substitute authorizes such agencies or corporations to borrow from the Treasury to carry out their functions under sections 302 and 303, regardless of whether appropriations have been made for that purpose, but the total amount so borrowed may not exceed $600,000,000 outstanding at any one time. In addition, appropriations of up to $1,400,000,000 are authorized to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303.

Title IV—Price and Wage Stabilization

[Title II of House bill, title IV of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

SELECTIVE CONTROLS

Section 202 (b) of the House bill authorized the President to establish ceilings with respect to materials and services, and with respect to wages, salaries, and other compensation, either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally. The corresponding section (402 (b)) of the Senate amendment provided that such action could not be taken with respect to individual materials and services, but could be taken only with respect to materials and services generally. The conference substitute provides that such action may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. However, a ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (1) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950; (2) the price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense; (3) the imposition of the ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the act; (4) it is practicable and feasible to impose the ceiling; and (5) the ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of the material or service and related and competitive materials and services.

RELATION BETWEEN PRICE CONTROLS AND WAGE CONTROLS

The House bill authorized the President, in exercising price and wage controls, "at the same time both" to establish price ceilings and to establish wage ceilings, and, except when deemed necessary to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of the act, required the establishment of wage ceilings whenever an increase in wages would require increases in price ceilings or impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment provided that whenever price ceilings were established (and they could be established only with respect to materials and services generally) wages should be stabilized, and contained a similar provision for exceptions necessary to prevent gross inequities or to effectuate the purposes of the act. The House bill also required that wages be stabilized generally whenever price ceilings have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment provided for general stabilization of wages whenever price ceilings have been established on materials and services generally. The provisions of the House bill and the Senate amendment were rewritten in conference and are found in section 402 (b) of the conference substitute. It provides that when the President establishes price ceilings, he shall stabilize wages at the same time in accordance with the following principles. Whenever a price ceiling is established for a particular material or service, wages shall be stabilized in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service. In stabilizing wages under this provision the President shall prohibit wage increases which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling. When price ceilings have been established for materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living the President shall impose price ceilings generally and stabilize wages generally.

APPLICABLE BASE PERIOD

In establishing ceilings on materials (including fish and fish commodities and the marketing and processing thereof) and services in which prices prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, are not representative because of wage disputes or other cause, it is clearly understood that a representative period other than the period May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, shall be selected in such cases in order that the ceilings established will reflect prices generally representative.

CONTRACTS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY

The Senate amendment contained a provision that requires the President to make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of a price control regulation for future delivery of materials processed from raw materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The conferees agreed to the Senate provision with an amendment making it applicable to all materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

CEILINGS ON AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

The House bill contained provisions prohibiting the establishment of a ceiling on agricultural commodities below the higher of (1) the parity price of such commodity, or (2) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, or (3) in those cases in which a producer did not normally market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by a producer in the first thirty day normal marketing period following May 24, 1950. The Senate amendment provided that no ceilings could be established on an agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices (1) the parity price of such commodity, or (2) the price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or (3) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active in the May 24 to June 24, 1950, period, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a price in line with the level of prices received by producers of agricultural commodities generally prevailing during the period from May 24 to June 24, 1950, or (4) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price equal to 75 percent of the parity price for burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, or of 66⅔ percent of such parity price in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco. The conference substitute retains the provisions of the House bill with respect to items (1) and (2) but retains the Senate amendment with respect to items (3) and (4).

The Senate amendment contained a further provision which was included in the conference substitute, requiring the President in establishing a ceiling for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season, to give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of such agricultural commodity in all areas.

PUBLIC UTILITY RATES

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment exempted from price ceilings rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility. The Senate amendment, however, contained a proviso, which was not included in the House bill, which required that 30-day notice be given the President of any intended general increases in rates or charges over the base period, May 24 to June 24, 1950, any time after the President had issued stabilization regulations or orders. The common carrier or other public utility was also required to consent to timely intervention by the President, or such agency as he might designate, before the Federal, State, or municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such rate increase. The conference substitute contains a substitute proviso under which any common carrier or other public utility, before making any increase in its charges for property or services sold by it for resale to the public, is required to give the above prescribed notice and consent to intervention, unless an application for an increase in charges was filed with the regulatory body having jurisdiction to consider such increase before the issuance by the President of stabilization regulations or orders.

BUSINESS PRACTICES

Section 402 (i) of the Senate amendment prohibited the President from using his control powers under title IV to eliminate or restrict the use of trade or brand names, require grade labeling, standardize materials or services except where no alternative exists for effective price control, or establish price ceilings on the basis of specifications or standards not previously in general use or required under Federal law. No similar provision was in the House bill. The provision is included as section 402 (h) of the conference substitute. Section 402 (j) of the Senate amendment prohibited the President from using his powers under title IV to require any retail seller or any service establishment operator to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time. No similar provision was in the House bill. The provision is included as section 402 (i) of the conference substitute, but the reference to service establishment operators is eliminated.

NEW INDEPENDENT AGENCY

The Senate amendment contained a section providing that at such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level, through a new independent agency created for such purpose. The Senate amendment likewise provided that such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department. The House bill did not contain a comparable section. The conference substitute contains the same language as the Senate amendment.

It is not, however, the intention of the conferees to prevent such a new independent agency from utilizing the inspection and investigating services of existing agencies of the Government.

SETTLEMENT OF GOVERNMENT SUITS

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the President to bring suit with respect to violations of ceilings applicable to sales under certain conditions where the buyer fails or is unable to bring suit. The Senate amendment added a provision authorizing the Government to compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

EMERGENCY COURT OF APPEAL

The Senate amendment contained a provision, which was not in the House bill, limiting the jurisdiction of the Emergency Court of Appeals to cases involving regulations and orders relating to price controls. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OF EMERGENCY COURT OF APPEALS

The House bill gave exclusive jurisdiction to the Emergency Court of Appeals to determine the validity of price control regulations. The Senate amendment permitted any court of competent jurisdiction to pass upon the validity of such a regulation when involved in a case otherwise properly pending before it. The conference substitute retains the House provision, with an additional provision which permits recourse to the Emergency Court of Appeals when the validity of a regulation is questioned in certain cases pending in other courts, and provides for staying such cases until the Emergency Court of Appeals has made its determination. The additional provision (sec. 408 (e)) is similar to a provision of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended.

CERTAIN GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Section 410 of the Senate amendment required that any contract to purchase processed chickens or turkeys for the Government entered into when price ceilings are in effect for the fowl covered by the contract shall contain a provision that in the event and to the extent the price paid to the producers of the fowls processed in performing the contract is less than the estimated price on which the contract is based the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents per pound. No similar provision was in the House bill. The provision is included as section 410 of the conference substitute.

Title V—Settlement of Labor Disputes

Section 501 of the Senate amendment declared the intent of Congress that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense. Section 502 provided that the national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to a labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement of the national interest. It authorized the President, after consultation with labor and management, "to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense," and to designate appropriate persons, boards, or commissions to carry out the title. Section 503 provided that in any action taken under the title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by collective bargaining which will be fair to labor and to management and consistent with stabilization policies under the act. It provided also that any such action shall be consistent with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and with other applicable laws. No similar provisions were included in the House bill. These provisions are included in the conference substitute, except that the provisions of section 502 relating to the authority of the President are replaced by provisions authorizing him in order to carry out the policy expressed in section 502 "(1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent the Government and the public (2) subject to the provisions of section 503 to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title," and to designate appropriate persons or agencies to carry out the provisions of the title. The President would be authorized under this provision to establish a board, commission or other agency, similar to the War Labor Board of World War II, to carry out the title.

Title VI—Control of Consumer and Real Estate Credit

[Title V of House bill; title VI of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

LIMITATION ON CREDIT CONTROLS

A new sentence is included at the beginning of title VI of the conference substitute to make it clear that the authority granted by the title may be used only to control consumer credit and real estate construction credit.

CONSUMER CREDIT

The House bill authorized the President to control consumer credit in the same manner and to the same extent as real estate construction credit. The Senate amendment authorized the Federal Reserve Board to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order 8843 of August 9, 1941 (under which the so-called "Regulation W" was issued). The conference substitute (sec. 601) follows the language of the Senate amendment, with an added provision terminating the Board's control powers under the section whenever the President determines that such controls are no longer needed.

The Senate amendment contained a section designed to insure that the Federal Reserve Board in enforcing consumer credit controls could use the same powers as to investigations, injunctions, and jurisdictions as is now used by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the performance of its duties. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The conference report contains the language of the Senate amendment.

LOANS SECURED BY SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Attention of the conferees was called to the fact that while it was made clear in the Senate report that loans to members of savings and loan associations secured by share or deposit accounts in such associations should not be subject to consumer credit regulations, no mention was made that a similar exception should apply in the case of loans secured by a savings account in a savings bank. It is the intention of the conferees that equal treatment should be accorded borrowers against savings accounts in both types of savings institutions. Such loans secured by savings accounts in effect permit the borrowers to use part of their savings accounts without loss of accrued interest on the whole account.

REAL ESTATE CONSTRUCTION CREDIT

The House bill provided that the controls on real-estate credit should not restrict loans by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for loans of like classification made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government, nor should such controls otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans against private loans. No similar provision was in the Senate amendment. This provision is not contained in the conference substitute.

To aid in their enforcement, the House bill contained a provision allowing the President to require transactions or persons subject to real estate construction credit controls to be registered or licensed. The Senate amendment made no provision for licensing but did provide for registration. The conference report conforms to the Senate language.

Title VII—General Provisions

[Title VI of the House bill; title VII of the Senate Amendment and conference substitute]

ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES TO BUSINESS

The Senate amendment contained a provision requiring that whenever the President allocates any material to an extent which will result in a dislocation of normal distribution, he shall do so in such manner as to assure each individual business in the normal channel of distribution of such material of its fair share of the available civilian supply based, insofar as practicable, on the share received by such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950. The House bill was without a similar provision. The conference report contains the language of the Senate amendment with an amendment.

This amendment provides that when the President allocates a material, each segment of business in the normal channel of distribution of such material, so far as practicable, shall receive a fair share of such material and that due regard shall be given to the needs of new businesses.

DEFINITIONS

The House bill, in the General Provisions title, defined "person" and "materials". The Senate amendment, in addition, defined "facilities", "national defense", and "wages, salaries, and other compensation". The conference substitute contains the Senate definitions.

DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO AGENCIES

The House bill provided that any power or authority conferred upon the President by this act could be delegated to any officer or agency of the Government including any new agency or agencies which were authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary. The Senate amendment gave similar authority to the President except as otherwise specifically provided for in the act. Inasmuch as the conference substitute elsewhere contains a provision that if price and wage controls are imposed generally over a substantial portion of the national economy they shall be administered through a new independent agency created for such purpose, it was necessary to include a similar exception in this section of the conference substitute.

The House bill provided that any attorneys appointed for these agencies could appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court. Such authority was omitted from the conference substitute in view of the fact that under the provisions of section 706 as adopted by the committee of conference all litigation arising under the act or the regulations promulgated thereunder was placed under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

The Senate amendment provided for appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of the head and assistant heads, and regional or State officers, of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by the price and wage stabilization title as well as the heads of regional and State officers of such agency. The conference substitute in adopting this provision of the Senate amendment deleted such requirement with respect to appointment of the heads of regional or State officers of such agency.

JURISDICTION TO COMPEL TESTIMONY

The Senate amendment contained a provision which gave jurisdiction to the appropriate district court to compel appearance and giving of testimony in obedience to supbenas, and made failure to obey such an order punishable as a contempt of court. The conference substitute follows the language of the Senate amendment in this respect.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

No specific provision was made in the House bill for penalties for violation of the provision requiring the keeping of reports and furnishing of information necessary to the enforcement or administration of the act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The Senate amendment provided that in the case of a willful violation of such requirements the person, upon conviction, could be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. The conference substitute contains a similar provision.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF VOLUNTARY PROGRAMS

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions exempting from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States or the Federal Trade Commission Act actions taken at the request of the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense. The Senate amendment in a subsection which was not included in the House bill, placed emphasis upon consultation of the President with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests with a view to encouraging the making by such persons, with the approval of the President, of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of the act. The Senate amendment further provided that any official authorized to approve requests for exemptions from the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act in relation to a program of voluntary agreements shall be approved by the Senate unless otherwise required to be so appointed. The conference substitute contains the language of the Senate amendment with an amendment requiring that the prior approval of the Attorney General be obtained for any request under which exemption would be given in accordance with the provisions of this section.

CONSULTATION IN ISSUING REGULATIONS

The Senate amendment contained a provision which was not included in the House bill which required that any rule, regulation, or order or amendment thereto issued pursuant to the authority of the act be accompanied by a statement that consultation had been had with industry representatives and consideration given to their recommendations. Appropriate provision for exemption was made from this requirement in special circumstances. It was further provided that no such rule, regulation, or order should be invalid in the event of a subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such accompanying statement was inaccurate. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

Employment and Utilization

In addition to similar provisions contained in the House bill and Senate amendment with respect to employment of personnel, the Senate amendment contained a provision authorizing the President to employ experts and consultants in carrying out the provisions of the act. Individuals so employed could be paid not in excess of $50 per diem, allowed transportation expenses, and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence. The Senate amendment also authorized the President to utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and to utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services as may from time to time be made. Appropriate provision was made for exemption of persons whose services were utilized under these provisions from the operation of certain specified provisions of Federal law. The conference substitute includes the additional provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to employment of personnel.

Applicability of Act

The Senate amendment contained a provision which is included in the conference substitute stating that the provisions of this act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

Speculation by Government Employees

The Senate amendment contained a provision in section 710 (e) which made any officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including members of the Senate or House of Representatives or members of the Armed Forces) subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, for speculating directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange or disclosing any information designated by the President as confidential for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate. Appropriate exemption was made from this prohibition for legitimate hedging transactions and any purchase or sale accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The conference substitute follows the language of the Senate amendment but limits the application of the penalty to use or disclosure, for purposes of speculating on any commodity exchange, of confidential information received by any such officer or employee by virtue of his office or employment.

Joint Committee on Defense Production

The Senate amendment provided for a joint congressional committee to be composed of five members of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and five members of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by the act and to review the progress achieved in executing and administering such programs. Provision was made for the election of a chairman by the members of the committee. Payment of expenses up to $50,000 in any fiscal year was authorized. No similar provision for a joint committee was included in the House bill. This provision is included as section 712 of the conference substitute, except that the committee is authorized to elect from among its members a vice chairman, who shall not be a member of the same house as the chairman, and who is given the same power as the chairman to sign subpenas and vouchers.

TERMINATION DATE

The House bill provided that the act and all authority conferred thereunder should terminate June 30, 1951 or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation might designate. The Senate amendment provided for termination on June 30, 1952 and likewise provided for termination by Congress or the President at an earlier date. In addition, the Senate amendment provided that the Congress might also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of the act should terminate prior to June 30, 1952. The Senate amendment further provided that any agency created under the act might be continued in existence for the purposes of liquidation for not to exceed 60 days after termination.

The conference substitute provides that titles I, II, III, and VII shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, but that such titles shall be effective after June 30, 1951, only to the extent necessary to aid in carrying out contracts relating to the national defense entered into by the Government prior to July 1, 1951. The conference substitute provides that titles IV, V, and VI shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1951. It retains the provision for termination by concurrent resolution or Presidential proclamation prior to the termination otherwise provided for and retains the Senate provision for termination of any section of the act by concurrent resolution. Under the conference substitute, any agency created under the act may be continued for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed 6 months after the termination of the provision authorizing the creation of such agency. It is also made clear that the termination of any section of the act, or of any agency or corporation utilized under the act, shall not affect disbursement of funds or carrying out of contracts, commitments, or other obligations entered into prior to the date of termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out.

AMENDMENT TO TITLE

The conference substitute includes the Senate title of the bill.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 9176, the Defense Production Act of 1950.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 3042)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the 'Defense Production Act of 1950.'

"Table of contents

"Title I. Priorities and allocations.
"Title II. Authority to requisition.
"Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
"Title IV. Price and wage stabilization.
"Title V. Settlement of labor disputes.
"Title VI. Control of consumer and real estate credit.
"Title VII. General provisions.

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

"It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

"TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

"SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

"SEC. 102. In order to prevent hoarding, no person shall accumulate (1) in excess of the reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation. This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in section 101 of this Act.

"SEC. 103. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

"SEC. 201. (a) Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that all other means of obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall promptly determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid promptly 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, without regard to whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000, in any district court of the United States, within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

"(b) Whenever the President determines that any real property acquired under this title and retained is no longer needed for the defense of the United States, he shall, if the original owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, return such property to the owner. In the event the President and the original owner do not agree as to the fair value of the property, the fair value shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the President, one by the original owner, and the third by the first two appraisers; the expenses of such determination shall be paid in equal shares by the Government and the original owner.

"(c) Whenever the need for the national defense of any personal property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

"TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

"SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense.

"(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

"(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

"(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purpose of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

"SEC. 302. To expedite production and deliveries or services to aid in carrying out Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises (including research corporations not organized for profit), for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

"SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling, and no agricultural commodity shall be sold for such purposes at less than the higher of the following: (i) the current market price for such commodity, or (ii) the minimum sale price established for agricultural commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress.

"(b) Subject to the limitations in subsection (a), purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under such subsection may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

"(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

"(d) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by the United States Government, and to install Government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by private persons.

"SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize such existing departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new agencies (other than corporations).

"(b) Any agency created under this section, and any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under sections 302 and 303: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $600,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this subsection, the borrower may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at its option before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of obligations hereunder.

"(c) In addition to the sums authorized to be borrowed under subsection (b), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303, such sums, not in excess of $1,400,000,000, as may be necessary therefor.

"TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

"SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

"SEC. 402. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under section 708, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

"(b) (1) To the extent that the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service, and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(2) Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. A ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (i) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (ii) such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense, (iii) the imposition of such ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, (iv) it is practicable and feasible to impose such ceiling, and (v) such ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of such material or service and to sellers and buyers of related or competitive materials and services.

"(3) Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

"(4) Whenever ceilings on prices have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living, the President (i) shall impose ceilings on prices and services generally, and (ii) shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation generally.

"(5) In stabilizing wages under paragraph (3) of this subsection, the President shall issue regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling.

"(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order. The President, in establishing and adjusting ceilings with respect to materials and services, and in stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, and other compensation, shall make such adjustments as he deems necessary to prevent or correct hardships or inequities.

"(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection; but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

"(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

"(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950 and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 percent of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 66⅔ percent of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. No ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the highest price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity; and in establishing the ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

"(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

"(i) Prices or rentals for real property;

"(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

"(iii) Prices or rentals for (a) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

"(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

"(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility: Provided, That no common carrier or other public utility shall at any time after the President shall have issued any stabilization regulations and orders under subsection (b) make any increase in its charges for property or services sold by it for resale to the public, for which application is filed after the date of issuance of such stabilization regulations and orders, before the Federal, State or Municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase, unless it first gives 30 days' notice to the President, or such agency as he may designate, and consents to the timely intervention by such agency before the Federal, State or Municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase;

"(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

"(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

"(g) The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

"(h) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) as authorizing the elimination or any restriction of the use of trade and brand names; (2) as authorizing the President to require the grade labeling of any materials; (3) as authorizing the President to standardize any materials or services, unless the President shall determine, with respect to such standardization, that no practicable alternative exists for securing effective price control with respect to such materials or services; or (4) as authorizing any order of the President establishing price ceilings for different kinds, classes, or types of material or service which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use in the trade or industry affected, or have previously been promulgated and their use lawfully required by another Government agency.

"(i) No rule, regulation, or order issued under this title shall require any seller of materials at retail to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

"SEC. 403. At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of Title I of this Act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department.

"SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President, shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

"SEC. 405. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

"SEC. 406. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

"SEC. 407. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order relating to price controls under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

"(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of this Act.

"(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

"(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

"SEC. 408. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the portest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

"(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

"(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

"(e) (1) Within thirty days after arraignment, or such additional time as the court may allow for good cause shown, in any criminal proceeding, and within five days after judgment in any civil or criminal proceeding, brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving alleged violation of any provision of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, the defendant may apply to the court in which the proceeding is pending for leave to file in the Emergency Court of Appeals a complaint against the President setting forth objections to the validity of any provision which the defendant is alleged to have violated or conspired to violate. The court in which the proceeding is pending shall grant such leave with respect to any objection which it finds is made in good faith and with respect to which it finds there is reasonable and substantial excuse for the defendant's failure to present such objection in a protest filed in accordance with section

407 of this title. Upon the filing of a complaint pursuant to and within thirty days from the granting of such leave, the Emergency Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside in whole or in part the provision of the regulation or order complained of or to dismiss the complaint. The court may authorize the introduction of evidence, either to the President or directly to the court, in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall be applicable with respect to any proceeding instituted in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) In any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving an alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the court shall stay the proceeding—

"(i) during the period within which a complaint may be filed in the Emergency Court of Appeals pursuant to leave granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision;

"(ii) during the pendency of any protest properly filed by the defendant under section 407 of this title prior to the institution of the proceeding under section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18 United States Code, setting forth objections to the validiy of such provision which the court finds to have been made in good faith; and

"(iii) during the pendency of any judicial proceeding instituted by the defendant under this section with respect to such protest or instituted by the defendant under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision, and until the expiration of the time allowed in this section for the taking of further proceedings with respect thereto.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, stays shall be granted thereunder in civil proceedings only after judgment and upon application made within five days after judgment. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, in the case of a proceeding under section 409 (a) or 706 (a) of this Act the court granting a stay under this paragraph shall issue a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining or restraining, during the period of the stay, violations by the defendant of any provision of the regulation or order involved in the proceeding. If any provision of a regulation or order is determined to be invalid by judgment of the Emergency Court of Appeals which has become effective in accordance with section 408 (b) of this title, any proceeding pending in any court shall be dismissed, and any judgment in such proceeding vacated, to the extent that such proceeding or judgment is based upon violation of such provision. Except as provided in this subsection, the pendency of any protest under section 407 of this title, or judicial proceeding under this section, shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code; nor, except as provided in this subsection, shall any retroactive effect be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation or order issued under this title.

"SEC. 409. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 405 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period, or compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. If such action is instituted, or such liability is compromised by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages, or a compromise, under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered, or prior to such compromise. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

"(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

"(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"SEC. 410. Each contract providing for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys by any department or agency of the United States from any contractor, entered into at any time when ceiling prices are in effect under this Act for whichever of such fowl is covered by such contract, shall contain the following provision (with such change as may be necessary to describe the fowl covered by the contract):

" 'The contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for live chickens or live turkeys to be processed hereunder. In the event and to the extent that the actual price paid to the producers of live chickens or live turkeys purchased for the performance of this contract is less than such estimated price, the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents or fraction thereof, per pound.'

"TITLE V

"SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

"SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

"SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. To this end, the President is authorized (1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent government and the public, and (2) subject to the provisions of section 503, to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. The President may designate such persons or agencies as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 503. In any such conference, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. No action inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or with other applicable laws shall be taken under this title.

"TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

"THIS TITLE AUTHORIZES THE REGULATION OF CONSUMER CREDIT AND REAL ESTATE CONSTRUCTION CREDIT ONLY

"SEC. 601. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 386, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 921), to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order Numbered 8843 (August 9, 1941) until such time as the President determines that the exercise of such controls is no longer necessary, but in no event beyond the date on which this section terminates.

"SEC. 602. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this section or to prevent evasions thereof.

"In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

"(b) No person shall extend or maintain any real estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this section; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

"(c) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this section, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this section to be registered; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration for violation of this section or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this section, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

"(d) For the purposes of this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, accounting, and other terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section:

"(1) 'Real estate construction credit' means any credit which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term 'new construction' means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term 'real property' includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term 'real estate construction credit' shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

"(2) 'Credit' means any loan, mortgage, deed of trust, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

"SEC. 603. Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601 or 602 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 604. All the present provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters), shall be as fully applicable with respect to the exercise by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System of credit controls under section 601 as they are now applicable with respect to the exercise by the Securities and Exchange Commission of its functions under that Act, and the Board shall have the same powers in the exercise of such credit controls as the Commission now has under the said sections 21 and 27.

"SEC. 605. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States Government, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

"TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

"(b) In order to carry out this policy—

"(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

"(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

"(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

"(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

"(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this Act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a significant dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such a manner as to make available, so far as practicable, for business and various segments thereof in the normal channel of distribution of such material, a fair share of the available civilian supply based, so far as practicable, on the share received by such business under normal conditions during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950, and having due regard to the needs of new businesses.

"SEC. 702. As used in this Act—

"(a) The word 'person' includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivisions, or government agency.

"(b) The word 'material' shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

"(c) The word 'facilities' shall not include farms, churches or other place of worship, or private dwelling houses.

"(d) The term 'national defense' means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

"(e) The words 'wages, salaries, and other compensation' shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but not limited to, vacation and holiday payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

"SEC. 703. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary), and he may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"(b) The head and assistant heads of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this Act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this Act, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or to facilitate enforcement of this Act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act.

"SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in this subsection, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the President, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

"(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(d) Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited or willfully fails to perform any act required by the above provisions of this section, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year or both.

"(e) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 706. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this act, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(b) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act. All litigation arising under this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

"SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

"SEC. 708. (a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this Act.

"(b) No act or omission to act pursuant to this Act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

"(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall be delegated only (1) to officials who shall for the purpose of such delegation be required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless otherwise required to be so appointed, and (2) upon the condition that such officials consult with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder, and (3) upon the condition that such officials obtain the approval of the Attorney General to any request thereunder before making the request. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this Act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

"(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

"(e) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this Act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within ninety days after the approval of this Act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

"SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this Act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

"SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

"(c) The President is authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act to employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof, as authorized by section 55a of title 5 of the United States Code. Individuals so employed may be compensated at rates not in excess of $50 per diem and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses while so employed. The President is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

"(d) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

"(e) Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives), receives, by virtue of his office or employment, confidential information, and (1) uses such information in speculating directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or (2) discloses such information for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. As used in this section, the term "speculate" shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity.

"SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

"SEC. 712. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production (hereinafter referred to as the committee), to be composed of ten members as follows:

"(1) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and

"(2) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members, one of whom shall be a Member of the Senate and the other a Member of the House of Representatives.

"(b) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by this Act, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs. Upon request, the committee shall aid the standing committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any part of the programs authorized by this Act; and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. Any department, official, or agency administering any of such programs shall, at the request of the committee, consult with the committee, from time to time, with respect to their activities under this Act.

"(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena (to be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the committee) or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

"(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

"(e) The expenses of the committee under this section, which shall not exceed $50,000 in any fiscal year, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Clerk of the House of Representatives out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the Senate in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made without regard to any other provision of law.

"SEC. 713. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 714. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 715. That no person may be employed under this Act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this Act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law. The termination of this Act, or of any agency or corporation utilized under its provisions, shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, guarantee, commitment or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act.

"SEC. 716. (a) Titles I, II, III, and VII of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, but such titles shall be effective after June 30, 1951 only to the extent necessary to aid in carrying out contracts relating to the national defense entered into by the Government prior to July 1, 1951.

"(b) Titles IV, V, and VI of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1951.

"(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing—

"(1) The Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may terminate this Act prior to the termination otherwise provided therefor.

"(2) The Congress may also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate prior to the termination otherwise provided therefor.

"(3) Any agency created under this Act may be continued in existence for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed six months after the termination of the provision authorizing the creation of such agency.

"(d) The termination of any section of this Act, or of any agency or corporation utilized under this Act, shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, guarantee, commitment or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The Conferees have agreed to a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. Except for clarifying, clerical, and minor changes, the differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed to in conference are explained below.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

Administration of priorities and allocations powers

Section 101 of both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the President to assign priorities and allocate materials and facilities to promote the national defense. Under the House bill the President could delegate this authority to any officer or agency of the Government, but the Senate amendment provided that, with certain exceptions, this power should be exercised by the Secretary of Commerce. The conference substitute follows the language of the House bill.

The conferees assume that, so far as practicable, in carrying out this section the President will not delegate the authority therein granted with respect to any one basic commodity except to a single agency of the Government. The conferees further assume that if the President makes extensive use of his powers under this title, he will designate an existing agency, or establish a new agency, to coordinate the activities of all Federal agencies under the bill.

Anti-hoarding provisions

Section 103 of the House bill, based on a provision of the Lever Act of World War I (40 Stat. 276), provided that any person who hoarded "necessaries" (defined to include foods, feeds, fertilizers, automobile tires and other specified commodities plus other unspecified commodities to be designated by the President) should be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Section 102 of the Senate amendment, designed to accomplish the same purpose, subjected to the same penalty any person who accumulates (1) in excess of the reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials designated by the President as scarce or the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The conference substitute (section 102) follows the language of the Senate amendment, except that the phrase "reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption" is changed to read "reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption", and an introductory phrase "In order to prevent hoarding" is included in the section.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

[Title III of House bill; title II of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

Suits in district courts

The House bill provided that a suit by the owner of any property requisitioned under the bill to recover just compensation for the property may be brought in the Court of Claims or, if the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any Federal district court. The Senate amendment provided that such a suit may be brought in any Federal district court, regardless of whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000. The House recedes.

Return of requisitioned property

The House bill and the Senate amendment contained different provisions with respect to returning requisitioned property to the original owner, upon payment by him of its fair value, after it is no longer needed. The principal differences were: (1) the House bill required such a return "to the extent feasible and practicable," but the Senate amendment contained no such qualifying language; (2) the House bill provided that the fair value of the property should be determined by the President, but the Senate amendment provided that a dispute between the President and the owner as to fair value should be settled by arbitration; (3) the House bill exempted fungibles and property valued at less than $1,000 from this requirement; and (4) the Senate amendment required that the property be returned not later than June 30, 1952. The conference substitute retains the provisions of the Senate amendment as to real property (except that the June 30, 1952, deadline is eliminated), and the provisions of the House bill as to personal property.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

[Title IV of House bill, title III of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

Guarantees

Section 401 of the House bill authorized any Federal agency "engaged in procurement" to guarantee financing institutions against losses incurred in financing contracts and other operations "related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or any agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense." The corresponding section (301) of the Senate amendment (retained in the conference substitute) authorizes any Federal agency "engaged in procurement for the national defense" to make similar guarantees with respect to contracts and other operations "necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of material or the performance of services for the national defense."

Government installation of equipment

The Senate amendment contained a provision which authorized the President, when in his judgment it would aid the national defense, to install additional equipment, facilities processes, or make improvements to plants, factories and other industrial facilities owned by the Government. No similar provision was included in the House bill. The conference substitute contains this provision of the Senate amendment and in addition permits the installation of Government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other facilities owned by private persons.

Loans for expansion of productive capacity

To assist in carrying out the objectives of the Act the House bill contained authority for the President to make provision for loans to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic metals and materials. The Senate amendment contained similar authority for the purpose of expediting production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or for the performance of services for the national defense. Under the Senate amendment such loan authority was also broadened to include loans for research corporations not organized for profit. The conference substitute retains these provisions of the Senate amendment, except that the words "under Government contracts" are changed to "to aid in carrying out Government contracts" to make it clear that this authority extends to subcontracts and related operations.

Purchase authority for metals, minerals, and other raw materials

In the House bill authority was given to the President to make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or resale. The Senate amendment included a similar provision and in addition provided for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals. This additional provision is retained in the conference substitute but it is clearly understood that the use of the word "encouragement" is not intended to interfere with the regular Government operations of the Bureau of Mines. Provision was further made excluding purchases for resale of agricultural commodities except for industrial uses or stockpiling. The conference substitute adopts the language of the Senate amendment but provision is further made that no agricultural commodity shall be sold under the authority of this section at less than (1) the current market price or (2) the minimum sale price for agricultural commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439 of the Eighty-first Congress.

The Senate amendment added a new subsection (b) to this section which removed the procurement restrictions of other laws and gave authority to the President to make advance payments and prescribe other terms and conditions deemed necessary. Provision was made for payments in excess of current market prices, but such payments would be confined to cases in which the supply of essential materials could not be increased at lower prices or in which the purchases were necessary to assure availability to the United States of overseas supplies. The conference substitute retains this provision of the Senate amendment with the addition of language to make clear that the authority granted by this subsection is subject to the limitations outlined in the above paragraph.

New corporations

The House bill authorized the President to create new corporations for the purposes of sections 402 and 403. The Senate amendment authorized the creation of new agencies, but not corporations, for the purposes of sections 302 and 303 (the corresponding sections of the Senate amendment). The conference substitute contains the language of the Senate amendment.

Borrowing power

The House bill authorized corporations established or utilized for the purposes of sections 402 and 403 to borrow money from the Treasury to carry out their functions under the title, but provided that the total amount so borrowed should not exceed $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. The Senate amendment provided that, pending the making of appropriations for the purposes of sections 302 and 303, agencies or corporations utilized for the purposes of such sections or subtitle B (a provision of the Senate amendment which related to the development of metals and minerals, and is not included in the conference substitute) could borrow up to $300,000,000 at any one time to carry out their functions under the title. The conference substitute authorizes such agencies or corporations to borrow from the Treasury to carry out their functions under sections 302 and 303, regardless of whether appropriations have been made for that purpose, but the total amount so borrowed may not exceed $600,000,000 outstanding at any one time. In addition, appropriations of up to $1,400,000,000 are authorized to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303.

TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

[Title II of House bill, title IV of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

Selective controls

Section 402 (b) of the House bill authorized the President to establish ceilings with respect to materials and services, and with respect to wages, salaries, and other compensation, either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally. The corresponding section (202 (b)) of the Senate amendment provided that such action could not be taken with respect to individual materials and services, but could be taken only with respect to materials and services generally. The conference substitute provides that such action may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. However, a ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (1) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (2) the price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense, (3) the imposition of the ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Act, (4) it is practicable and feasible to impose the ceiling, and (5) the ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of the material or service and related and competitive materials and services.

Relation between price controls and wage controls

The House bill authorized the President, in exercising price and wage controls, "at the same time both" to establish price ceilings and to establish wage ceilings, and, except when deemed necessary to prevent gross inequity or to effectuate the purposes of the Act, required the establishment of wage ceilings whenever an increase in wages would require increases in price ceilings or impose an undue burden on a seller operating under a price ceiling. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment provided that whenever price ceilings were established (and they could be established only with respect to materials and services generally) wages should be established, and contained a similiar provision for exceptions necessary to prevent gross inequities or to effectuate the purposes of the Act. The House bill also required that wages be stabilized generally whenever price ceilings have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment provided for general stabilization of wages whenever price ceilings have been established on materials and services generally. The provisions of the House bill and the Senate amendment were rewritten in conference and are found in section 402 (b) of the conference substitute. It provides that when the President establishes price ceilings, he shall stabilize wages at the same time in accordance with the following principles. Whenever a price ceiling is established for a particular material or service, wages shall be stabilized in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service. In stabilizing wages under this provision the President shall prohibit wage increases which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling. When price ceilings have been established for materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living the President shall impose price ceilings generally and stabilize wages generally.

Applicable base period

In establishing ceilings on materials (including fish and fish commodities and the marketing and processing thereof) and services in which prices prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, are not representative because of wage disputes or other cause, it is clearly understood that a representative period other than the period May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, shall be selected in such cases in order that the ceilings established will reflect prices generally representative.

Contracts for future delivery

The Senate amendment contained a provision that requires the President to make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of a price control regulation for future delivery of materials processed from raw materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The conferees agreed to the Senate provision with an amendment making it applicable to all materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

Ceilings on agricultural commodities

The House bill contained provisions prohibiting the establishment of a ceiling on agricultural commodities below the higher of (1) the parity price of such commodity, or (2) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, or (3) in those cases in which a producer did not normally market a commodity during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by a producer in the first thirty day normal marketing period following May 24, 1950. The Senate amendment provided that no ceilings could be established on an agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices (1) the parity price of such commodity, or (2) the price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950 inclusive, or (3) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active in the May 24 to June 24, 1950 period, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950 adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a price in line with the level of prices received by producers of agricultural commodities generally prevailing during the period from May 24 to June 24, 1950, or (4) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price equal to 75 per centum of the parity price for burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, or of 66⅔ per centum of such parity price in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco. The conference substitute retains the provisions of the House bill with respect to items (1) and (2) but retains the Senate amendment with respect to items (3) and (4).

The Senate amendment contained a further provision which was included in the conference substitute, requiring the President in establishing a ceiling for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season, to give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of such agricultural commodity in all areas.

Public utility rates

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment exempted from price ceilings rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility. The Senate amendment, however, contained a proviso, which was not included in the House bill, which required that 30-day notice be given the President of any intended general increases in rates or charges over the base period, May 24 to June 24, 1950, any time after the President had issued stabilization regulations or orders. The common carrier or other public utility was also required to consent to timely intervention by the President, or such agency as he might designate, before the Federal, State, or municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such rate increase. The conference substitute contains a substitute proviso under which any common carrier or other public utility, before making any increase in its charges for property or services sold by it for resale to the public, is required to give the above prescribed notice and consent to intervention, unless an application for an increase in charges was filed with the regulatory body having jurisdiction to consider such increase before the issuance by the President of stabilization regulations or orders.

Business practices

Section 402 (i) of the Senate amendment prohibited the President from using his control powers under title IV to eliminate or restrict the use of trade or brand names, require grade labeling, standardize materials or services except where no alternative exists for effective price control, or establish price ceilings on the basis of specifications or standards not previously in general use or required under Federal law. No similar provision was in the House bill. The provision is included as section 402 (h) of the conference substitute. Section 402 (j) of the Senate amendment prohibited the President from using his powers under title IV to require any retail seller or any service establishment operator to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time. No similar provision was in the House bill. The provision is included as section 402 (i) of the conference substitute, but the reference to service establishment operators is eliminated.

New independent agency

The Senate amendment contained a section providing that at such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level, through a new independent agency created for such purpose. The Senate amendment likewise provided that such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department. The House bill did not contain a comparable section. The conference substitute contains the same language as the Senate amendment.

It is not, however, the intention of the conferees to prevent such a new independent agency from utilizing the inspection and investigating services of existing agencies of the Government.

Settlement of Government suits

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the President to bring suit with respect to violations of ceilings applicable to sales under certain conditions where the buyer fails or is unable to bring suit. The Senate amendment added a provision authorizing the Government to compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

Emergency Court of Appeals

The Senate amendment contained a provision, which was not in the House bill, limiting the jurisdiction of the Emergency Court of Appeals to cases involving regulations and orders relating to price controls. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

Exclusive jurisdiction of Emergency Court of Appeals

The House bill gave exclusive jurisdiction to the Emergency Court of Appeals to determine the validity of price control regulations. The Senate amendment permitted any court of competent jurisdiction to pass upon the validity of such a regulation when involved in a case otherwise properly pending before it. The conference substitute retains the House provision, with an additional provision which permits recourse to the Emergency Court of Appeals when the validity of a regulation is questioned in certain cases pending in other courts, and provides for staying such cases until the Emergency Court of Appeals has made its determination. The additional provision (section 408 (e)) is similar to a provision of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended.

Certain Government contracts

Section 410 of the Senate amendment required that any contract to purchase processed chickens or turkeys for the Government, entered into when price ceilings are in effect for the fowl covered by the contract shall contain a provision that in the event and to the extent the price paid to the producers of the fowls processed in performing the contract is less than the estimated price on which the contract is based the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents per pound. No similar provision was in the House bill. The provision is included as section 410 of the conference substitute.

TITLE V—SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

Section 501 of the Senate amendment declared the intent of Congress that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense. Section 502 provided that the national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to a labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement of the national interest. It authorized the President, after consultation with labor and management, "to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense", and to designate appropriate persons, boards, or commissions to carry out the title. Section 503 provided that in any action taken under the title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by collective bargaining which will be fair to labor and to management and consistent with stabilization policies under the Act. It provided also that any such action shall be consistent with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and with other applicable laws. No similar provisions were included in the House bill. These provisions are included in the conference substitute, except that the provisions of section 502 relating to the authority of the President are replaced by provisions authorizing him in order to carry out the policy expressed in section 502 "(1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent the government and the public (2) subject to the provisions of section 503 to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title", and to designate appropriate persons or agencies to carry out the provisions of the title. The President would be authorized under this provision to establish a board, commission or other agency, similar to the War Labor Board of World War II, to carry out the title.

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

[Title V of House bill; title VI of Senate amendment and conference substitute]

Limitation on credit controls

A new sentence is included at the beginning of title VI of the conference substitute to make it clear that the authority granted by the title may be used only to control consumer credit and real estate construction credit.

Consumer credit

The House bill authorized the President to control consumer credit in the same manner and to the same extent as real estate construction credit. The Senate amendment authorized the Federal Reserve Board to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order 8843 of August 9, 1941 (under which the so-called "Regulation W" was issued). The conference substitute (section 601) follows the language of the Senate amendment, with an added provision terminating the Board's control powers under the section whenever the President determines that such controls are no longer needed.

The Senate amendment contained a section designed to insure that the Federal Reserve Board in enforcing consumer credit controls could use the same powers as to investigations, injunctions, and jurisdictions as is now used by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the performance of its duties. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The conference report contains the language of the Senate amendment.

Loans secured by savings accounts

Attention of the conferees was called to the fact that while it was made clear in the Senate report that loans to members of savings and loan associations secured by share or deposit accounts in such associations should not be subject to consumer credit regulations, no mention was made that a similar exception should apply in the case of loans secured by a savings account in a savings bank. It is the intention of the conferees that equal treatment should be accorded borrowers against savings accounts in both types of savings institutions. Such loans secured by savings accounts in effect permit the borrowers to use part of their savings accounts without loss of accrued interest on the whole account.

Real estate construction credit

The House bill provided that the controls on real estate construction credit should not restrict loans by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for loans of like classification made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government, nor should such controls otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans against private loans. No similar provision was in the Senate amendment. This provision is not contained in the conference substitute.

To aid in their enforcement, the House bill contained a provision allowing the President to require transactions or persons subject to real estate construction credit controls to be registered or licensed. The Senate amendment made no provision for licensing but did provide for registration. The conference report conforms to the Senate language.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

[Title VI of the House bill; title VII of the Senate amendment and conference substitute]

Allocation of supplies to business

The Senate amendment contained a provision requiring that whenever the President allocates any material to an extent which will result in a dislocation of normal distribution, he shall do so in such manner as to assure each individual business in the normal channel of distribution of such material of its fair share of the available civilian supply based, insofar as practicable, on the share received by such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950. The House bill was without a similar provision. The conference report contains the language of the Senate amendment with an amendment.

This amendment provides that when the President allocates a material, each segment of business in the normal channel of distribution of such material, so far as practicable, shall receive a fair share of such material and that due regard shall be given to the needs of new businesses.

Definitions

The House bill, in the General Provisions Title, defined "person" and "materials", The Senate amendment, in addition, defined "facilities", "national defense", and "wages, salaries, and other compensation". The conference substitute contains the Senate definitions.

Delegation of authority to agencies

The House bill provided that any power or authority conferred upon the President by this Act could be delegated to any officer or agency of the Government including any new agency or agencies which were authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary. The Senate amendment gave similar authority to the President except as otherwise specifically provided for in the Act. Inasmuch as the conference substitute elsewhere contains a provision that if price and wage controls are imposed generally over a substantial portion of the national economy they shall be administered through a new independent agency created for such purpose, it was necessary to include a similar exception in this section of the conference substitute.

The House bill provided that any attorneys appointed for these agencies could appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court. Such authority was omitted from the conference substitute in view of the fact that under the provisions of section 706 as adopted by the committee of conference all litigation arising under the Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder was placed under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

The Senate amendment provided for appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of the head and assistant heads, and regional or State officers, of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by the price and wage stabilization title as well as the heads of regional and State officers of such agency. The conference substitute in adopting this provision of the Senate amendment deleted such requirement with respect to appointment of the heads of regional or State officers of such agency.

Jurisdiction to compel testimony

The Senate amendment contained a provision which gave jurisdiction to the appropriate Federal district court to compel appearance and giving of testimony in obedience to subpenas, and made failure to obey such an order punishable as a contempt of court. The conference substitute follows the language of the Senate amendment in this respect.

Penalty for violation of reporting requirements

No specific provision was made in the House bill for penalties for violation of the provision requiring the keeping of reports and furnishing of information necessary to the enforcement or administration of the Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The Senate amendment provided that in the case of a willful violation of such requirements the person, upon conviction, could be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. The conference substitute contains a similar provision.

Encouragement of voluntary programs

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions exempting from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws of the United States or the Federal Trade Commission Act actions taken at the request of the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense. The Senate amendment in a subsection which was not included in the House bill, placed emphasis upon consultation of the President with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests with a view to encouraging the making by such persons, with the approval of the President, of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of the Act. The Senate amendment further provided that any official authorized to approve requests for exemptions from the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act in relation to a program of voluntary agreements shall be approved by the Senate unless otherwise required to be so appointed. The conference substitute contains the language of the Senate amendment with an amendment requiring that the prior approval of the Attorney General be obtained for any request under which exemption would be given in accordance with the provisions of this section.

Consultation in issuing regulations

The Senate amendment contained a provision which was not included in the House bill which required that any rule, regulation, or order or amendment thereto issued pursuant to the authority of the Act be accompanied by a statement that consultation had been had with industry representatives and consideration given to their recommendations. Appropriate provision for exemption was made from this requirement in special circumstances. It was further provided that no such rule, regulation, or order should be invalid in the event of a subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such accompanying statement was inaccurate. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

Employment of personnel

In addition to similar provisions contained in the House bill and Senate amendment with respect to employment of personnel, the Senate amendment contained a provision authorizing the President to employ experts and consultants in carrying out the provisions of the Act. Individuals so employed could be paid not in excess of $50 per diem, allowed transportation expenses, and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence. The Senate amendment also authorized the President to utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and to utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services as may from time to time be made. Appropriate provision was made for exemption of persons whose services were utilized under these provisions from the operation of certain specified provisions of Federal law. The conference substitute includes the additional provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to employment and utilization of personnel.

Applicability of act

The Senate amendment contained a provision which is included in the conference substitute stating that the provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

Speculation by Government employees

The Senate amendment contained a provision in section 710 (e) which made any officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including members of the Senate or House of Representatives or members of the Armed Forces) subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, for speculating directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange or disclosing any information designated by the President as confidential for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate. Appropriate exemption was made from this prohibition for legitimate hedging transactions and any purchase or sale accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The conference substitute follows the language of the Senate amendment but limits the application of the penalty to use or disclosure, for purposes of speculating on any commodity exchange, of confidential information received by any such officer or employee by virtue of his office or employment.

Joint Committee on Defense Production

The Senate amendment provided for a joint congressional committee to be composed of five members of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and five members of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by the Act and to review the progress achieved in executing and administering such programs. Provision was made for the election of a chairman by the members of the committee. Payment of expenses up to $50,000 in any fiscal year was authorized. No similar provision for a joint committee was included in the House bill. This provision is included as section 712 of the conference substitute except that the committee is authorized to elect from among its members a vice chairman, who shall not be a member of the same house as the chairman, and who is given the same power as the chairman to sign subpenas and vouchers.

Termination date

The House bill provided that the Act and all authority conferred thereunder should terminate June 30, 1951 or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation might designate. The Senate amendment provided for termination on June 30, 1952 and likewise provided for termination by Congress or the President at an earlier date. In addition, the Senate amendment provided that the Congress might also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of the Act should terminate prior to June 30, 1952. The Senate amendment further provided that any agency created under the Act might be continued in existence for the purposes of liquidation for not to exceed sixty days after termination.

The conference substitute provides that titles I, II, III, and VII shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952 but that such titles shall be effective after June 30, 1951 only to the extent necessary to aid in carrying out contracts relating to the national defense entered into by the Government prior to July 1, 1951. The conference substitute provides that titles IV, V, and VI shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1951. It retains the provision for termination by concurrent resolution or Presidential proclamation prior to the termination otherwise provided for and retains the Senate provision for termination of any section of the Act by concurrent resolution. Under the conference substitute, any agency created under the Act may be continued for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed six months after the termination of the provision authorizing the creation of such agency. It is also made clear that the termination of any section of the Act, or of any agency or corporation utilized under the Act, shall not affect disbursement of funds or carrying out of contracts, commitments, or other obligations entered into prior to the date of termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out.

Amendment to title

The conference substitute includes the Senate title of the bill.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 81st CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 96 WASHINGTON, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1950 No. 175

House of Representatives

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, Thou hast created us in Thine own image and endowed us with capacities to attain unto the glorious likeness of the spirit of our blessed Lord.

Purge our minds and hearts from all those attitudes and activities which are contrary and alien to His spirit of love and reverence for Thee and good will toward man.

We pray that daily we may give life a more sacred and valiant reading by interpreting and manifesting its high and holy meaning and mission in terms of sacrificial service for God, for our country, and all mankind.

Grant that we may have a large part in building a nobler social order in which our bruised and broken and war-torn world shall find the blessing of peace.

We thank Thee for the Christian life and faithful ministry of Thy servant whose spirit now dwells with Thee in eternal blessedness. Grant unto the members of his bereaved family the consolation of Thy grace.

Hear us in Christ's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 537. Joint resolution making emergency appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3409. An act to establish a new Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; and

S. 4071. An act to provide allowances for dependents of enlisted members of the uniformed services, to suspend certain provisions of the Career Compensation Act of 1949, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States No. 51–6.

CERTIFICATION OF CITATION AGAINST JOSEPH P. KAMP

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to House Resolution 836, Eighty-first Congress, he did on today, September 1, 1950, certify to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia the refusal of Joseph P. Kamp to answer questions and produce documents before the Select Committee on Lobbying Activities.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of August 31, 1950.)

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a highly complicated and technical bill. A detailed explanation has been made in the statement of the managers on the part of the House. It was practically a unanimous report, only one of the conferees failing to sign it.

Mr. Speaker, we have no requests for time on this side. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to a matter in this bill which I think is very important. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the conferees have done a good job with a difficult situation and under circumstances which were not conducive, perhaps, to an intelligent approach. By that I mean the Banking and Currency Committee of the House was not permitted to have full and extended hearings on this bill, so it was difficult for the conferees and the House to do what, in my opinion, at least, would be a good job.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think the record should be made very clear, after this bill is passed, that if certain things happen which are authorized herein, many of the Members of the Congress are going to be faced with some embarrassing questions.

I think the committee of conference put into this bill something that neither the Senate nor the House approved. That is the provision for selective price control and wage control:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the debate in the House on August 9 there was presented an amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] to strike out from the bill subsection 2 of the Price and Wage Stabilization Act. That was known as the second step. You remember, there were three steps provided for in that original bill: First, voluntary price control; second, selective price and wage control; and, third, across-the-board price and wage control. Now, the second step was stricken out in the House by a vote of, I think, 94 to 70; in other words, a good substantial part of the House committee voted to strike out selective price and wage control.

When the bill was passed by the other body, selective price and wage control was not contained in their bill. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the conference committee in my judgment did put into the bill something that was not in it when it passed the House, or the other body.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. This is just too important a measure to be considered without a quorum. If the conferees are going to legislate, in conference, and insert provisions that both the House nor the Senate rejected, the Members ought to be here to hear it discussed. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] is giving us some very valuable information. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 291 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] may proceed.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the conference committee had placed in the bill a provision for selective price and wage controls, and that provision had been eliminated from the bill by both the Senate and the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize it may be said that the House bill did contain selective price and wage controls. I notice the report on page 31 contains this statement:

> Section 202 (b) of the House bill authorized the President to establish ceilings with respect to materials and services, and with respect to wages, salaries, and other compensation, either with respect to individual materials and services, or with respect to materials and services generally.

Mr. Speaker, I think that statement would have been more correct if it had started in this fashion: "It is alleged and some people believe that the House bill contains a provision for selective price and wage control."

I want to read that part of the House bill with respect to selective controls. You will recall that in the committee action the House struck out the second, or selective, step. Remember there were three steps in the House bill: First, the voluntary step; second, the selective step; and, third, the across-the-board step, in which the President could control all wages and prices. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] offered an amendment which struck from the House bill the selective control of prices and wages. Remaining in the bill, however, was the following language:

> Action under the subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services or with respect to materials and services generally.

But this sentence followed the subsection establishing across-the-board controls.

Mr. Speaker, I concede that that does leave an interpretation, perhaps, that under some circumstances the President could provide for selective controls. But the action of the House, I insist, striking out and decided that we not want selective controls, definitely binds, in my opinion, the conference committee members.

Mr. Speaker, in the Committee of the Whole House when the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered his amendment, on page 12317 of the RECORD, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] asked this question:

> Mr. COLMER. Some of us have not been able to follow where we would be if we voted for your amendment. Would the gentleman state in a few words, if your amendment were adopted, where would that leave the question of controls of commodities and wages?
>
> Mr. KUNKEL. It would put it right into the third section, which is subsection (c), on page 4, where there would be general, overall controls at which time it would be necessary to freeze wages generally and commodity prices generally.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Subsection (2) on page 7 of the conference report was proposed in the House and voted down, was it not?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. And it was proposed in the Senate and voted down?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. And that is verbatim, spellatim, and punctuatim—what they had before the House and the Senate?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out what we are doing by enacting selective price controls. It has been said that some individual commodity or some individual material or some individual service will rise in price unreasonably or materially affect the cost of living. That, for this reason, a price ceiling should be placed on the individual item, and wages controlled in the business producing the item.

Let me say for instance the President should decide that bread has risen to such an extent that its price should be controlled. If price controls are put on bread under this law, a ceiling is placed upon the wages of people who are processing bread. Now, who processes bread? Of course, naturally we think of the baker. So under this law we will put a ceiling on the wages of bakers and not upon anybody else.

But remember, Mr. Speaker, not only is the baker processing bread, but into the cost of bread goes the cost of production of wheat, and into the cost of the production of wheat is the cost of production on the farm. The wages of the farm laborer, the man who cultivates the soil, the man who combines, and the man who trucks the wheat to the elevator, and the wages of the men in the elevator all enter into the cost of bread. They are engaged in the processing of the material to make bread.

The wheat travels, by truck and train, from the elevator to the mill; from the mill to the baker, and from the baker to the jobber, and from the jobber to the grocer.

All of the men employed in these businesses are paid wages. Does the law place a ceiling on all of their wages? If not, why not? And who shall select the favored who are not controlled?

So, Mr. Speaker, in order for you to put a wage ceiling upon those wage-earners who have an effect upon the price of bread, you cannot be selective.

Then we are not through with the problem. Remember in preparing the ground sometimes we use fertilizer. An interesting thing about some fertilizer today is that it is cheaper than it was in 1939. But the people who are working in the fertilizer industry are receiving twice as much in wages as they were receiving in 1939. Shall their wages be reduced?

Also in order to prepare the ground we use disks and harrows and plows and combines. All of these are manufactured by people who are receiving wages. So, before we can determine the price of bread we must determine the price of combines. Before we can determine the price of combines, we must determine how much wages those people receive who manufacture the combines.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be utterly ridiculous to consider a bill which will permit such a dislocation of our economy by placing selective price and wage controls on individual items. It just will not work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

(Mr. COLE of Kansas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against subsection (2) on page 7 of the conference report on the ground that that provision was voted out by both the House and Senate and the conferees had no right to write it into the conference report. It reads as follows:

(2) Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. A ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (i) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (ii) such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense, (iii) the imposition of such ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, (iv) it is practicable and feasible to impose such ceiling, and (v) such ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of such material or service and to sellers and buyers of related or competitive materials and services.

Now, remember, this identical provision was rejected by both the House and the Senate.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] did not go all the way in explaining the dangers of it. The House knew the dangers of it, and the Senate knew the dangers of it, because it would allow this group to fix the price of coal, lumber, wheat, corn, cotton, potatoes, hogs, cattle, milk, butter, eggs, chickens, and everything else, individually or collectively. It is one of the most far-reaching and dangerous steps toward socialistic, or communistic regimentation ever presented to the Congress of the United States. Both Houses rejected it; and yet it has been inserted by the conferees in violation of the rules of both Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. RANKIN. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this provision was not in either bill and the conferees had no right to write it into the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Whether or not that is true, the statement has been read in lieu of the report. Debate has been had on the conference report. Therefore, although, if made at the proper time the Chair could have ruled on the point of order, coming as it does now, it is too late, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. In that connection let me say that they waived the reading of the conference report, and we had to go and search to get a copy of it and read it to find out about this monstrosity.

The SPEAKER. That was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANKIN. I submit that under the circumstances a point of order against this provision is justified at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no precedent that supports the gentleman's contention. The Chair has overruled the point of order.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, the RECORD of yesterday indicates that I was absent on roll call 267. I was present and answered to my name. I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal and the RECORD will be corrected accordingly.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, you probably noticed I did not sign this conference report. My reason for not signing it is basically the one outlined by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] in his remarks a few minutes ago. In my judgment, the clear intent of both the House and Senate was to impose controls across the board at one time, and at such time as the President determined that voluntary controls would not work.

When the House voted in favor of the amendment which I offered, it clearly indicated that intent. The Senate bill, in the final form as passed by the Senate, provided for the immediate transition from voluntary controls to general, over-all controls on both wages and prices. So I feel that this part of the bill does not represent the wishes of either body. I also feel that it will not do the job, because, with the huge expenditures and the huge production which this country is called upon to make as a result of the Korean operation, it is perfectly clear to me that this bill does not go far enough to solve the problem. Of course, this measure is absolutely necessary at this time. It contains many features which have to be instituted immediately and should have been put into effect before now. Consequently I do not feel like opposing the measure but I cannot urge its approval to other Members when it contains such basic defects as those I have pointed out.

I want to pay my respects to all the conferees, because this was quite a job in conference. It took a great deal of give and take. While I am opposed to this because it is basically against my ideas of what is necessary today, and because it does not fit the problem which we are called upon to meet, nevertheless, in view of the task which the conferees had to perform, I think they have done a very good over-all job. I want to say that despite that I disagree most heartily with their conclusion on this particular point. In many respects, the bill is better than the one which passed the House or the Senate. This is particularly true in regard to the general credit provision.

There is one additional factor involved here. Subsection 3 reads:

That whenever ceilings on prices have been established on materials with respect to a particular material or service the President shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

I called attention to the unfairness of that in the original debate. If a man is working in the steel industry, and a ceiling price is imposed on steel, then the President may impose a wage ceiling on the steelworker's wages. The steelworker is not protected at all against the rise in the cost of living, because the amount of steel he buys is relatively insignificant in comparison with what he has to pay out for other commodities which he needs, such as food, furniture, and things like that. At the same time, a man working in a shoe industry, living across the street, where the price of shoes is not frozen, can get a wage increase. It seems to me that a provision along that line is bound to cause more industrial unrest than anything we might put into this bill. Yet, as I read this provision, it is mandatory that the President do that when he puts a freeze on the cost of a commodity, and only has certain exceptions in which he could possibly make adjustments.

I feel that that provision is absolutely unfair to labor all the way down the line. If you are going to freeze wages, you have only one justification for trying to do so, and that is that you are going to protect the laboring man against an increase in the cost of living. But you do not do this under a selective system. The only way this could be remedied under this bill is that the President should skip this intermediate step, of his own volition, and go at once into a general, over-all control program.

I am afraid that the President will not do that, because he has opposed the elimination of the selective control provisions of this bill and has indicated very clearly that he wants the opportunity to have a selective control period. Of course, in my judgment, if you have a selective control period you will have greater and greater dislocations each day. When the time comes that it is necessary to impose over-all controls—and I feel sure that time will come—I think it will be too late to do it. That is the reason I have taken the position I have all through the debate on this bill. The dislocations will be so great that the administrative task will be impossible to perform. But if you are going to have over-all controls of wages and prices it is necessary to put them into effect as soon as those prices and wages have been determined by actual economic causes and by free collective bargaining.

I feel that the price-control section as written is against the wishes of both bodies; I feel that it will cause more harm than it can possibly cause good. I think it destroys the whole purpose we in the House had in mind and that the Senate had in mind. Therefore, I was unable to sign this report.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, both Houses voted down this provision, did they not?

Mr. KUNKEL. I notice that the gentleman has said that, but I do not actually remember. I do know that both Houses voted in favor of eliminating selective controls; and that is the key to the question in both Houses.

Mr. RANKIN. The distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE] said in response to my inquiry that both the House and the Senate had voted this down.

Mr. KUNKEL. The gentleman may be right; I just do not happen to remember that, so I am not stating it as a fact.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the conference report retain the so-called Wherry amendment provision for consultation by industry groups in livestock?

Mr. KUNKEL. The report retains the provision for industry consultation. I do not know that it provides for industry consultation on livestock, but it does provide for consultation.

There are a great many things in this bill that are good and anybody is completely justified in voting for it on the ground that it is necessary to take some steps at this time.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. If the gentleman will recall, when the bill was before the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] and I sponsored an amendment which kept controls off the press, off of magazines, books, and media of information. Is that retained in the conference report?

Mr. KUNKEL. That is included; the gentleman will find that at the bottom of page 9.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman make the contention that the freezing of wages, say in the steel industry, as he illustrated, is taken care of by the language in section 402 (b) (1)?

Mr. KUNKEL. No; in 402 (b) (3).

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman recall the language in 402 (b) (1), whether or not the term "and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages"? Does the gentleman contend that freezing and stabilizing bear the same connotation?

Mr. KUNKEL. I am using those words interchangeably; yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not agree with the gentleman on the question of stabilizing. I do not feel that wages are stabilized or frozen at the same time that the price is.

Mr. KUNKEL. I think the gentleman is making a distinction without a difference, but it is a question of phraseology.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. I want to compliment the gentleman on bringing out the fact that it will cause further injustices in the economic picture by having selective controls; and might I ask if it would not cause injustice as between various geographical areas? For example, areas dependent on steel and coal, if they are controlled and the rest of the country is not, would be a geographic dislocation.

Mr. KUNKEL. The gentleman's observation is sound. In addition to that, if we control wages in essential industries we will find the people working in those industries tending to drift out of the important industries, that is, important from the standpoint of war production which is the point we are looking at, and into industry where the wage is not controlled; and it actually will interfere with the production effort. I think, therefore, this provision is vicious and terribly unfair to labor. Anybody who has the real interest of labor at heart should certainly look very carefully at this provision.

(Mr. KUNKEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

[Mr. HINSHAW addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, do we have a right to offer amendments to this report?

The SPEAKER. Conference reports are not subject to amendment. They are voted either up or down.

Mr. RANKIN. The only thing to do then would be to vote it up or down or offer a motion to recommit it to the conference committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made a few moments ago on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think it is agreed by everyone that the conferees had a most difficult task. I have been in conference on bills which have been reported out of the House Banking and Currency Committee for at least 12 years and possibly 14 years. I have never been in a conference where there has been as much in controversy as there was in this conference.

The managers on the part of the House and the managers on the part of the Senate are not bound always by their own personal likes, dislikes, or interests in respect to compromising differences between House and Senate language. We do the best we can. In this case I believe the bill is a better bill than when it left the House; I believe it is a better bill than when it left the Senate.

May I take just a moment on selective controls. I do not disagree with anyone in respect to selective controls except I believe that the issue of selective controls has been blown up into a balloon much larger than its importance in respect to this legislation justifies. Under both the House and Senate bills selective controls could be put on. The major difference between the two in respect to selective controls is that under the Senate language the selective controls would be put on through a process of elimination; otherwise they would be put on directly. Now, of course, that would have been a very cumbersome procedure. If the administrators of this law wanted to put price controls on steel and only steel they could have frozen all prices as of a given date and then adjusted generally all prices excepting steel and they would have effectually provided for selective controls on steel alone.

I bring that out because on the floor, in the committee, in the press, and over the radio the issue has been created as a major issue between the House and Senate positions, that the one provided for selective controls, the other provided only for general controls. And, if it did become an issue—and it did, of course—that issue has been subordinated to the other most important issues in this bill. I believe that one of the most, if not the most important issue in this bill—and I want to reiterate this and make the fifth speech, if I may, on this question—is that with respect to general credit controls. I believe the House thought we had eliminated general credit controls, but it did not do so. The Senate, I do not think, was conscious of the fact until we got into conference, that they had left in the bill provisions which would have enabled the President to control every dollar of private credit, which is credit that does not emanate from the Federal Government or any agency of the Federal Government.

Now, one of the things which I was most pleased about was that the conference committee, finally realizing that the President, under both bills, was given that authority, struck it from both bills, and those of us who were in favor of free enterprise and in favor of not giving any individual, no matter how benignly he might administer the controls, the control of all credit, were very pleased that the controls in this bill are confined to consumer credit controls and to the control of credit incident to new construction on real estate.

I felt that another very important provision in this bill transcending, perhaps, all others, was whether this Congress would have an opportunity next spring to say whether it wanted to continue these controls. The House had provided that they should expire on June 30, 1951. The Senate had provided that the authority expire on June 30, 1952. The House prevailed, and in consequence the Congress will be able to determine as shortly after January 3 as they want to whether they want to continue any of these controls beyond June 30, 1951. Even on January 4, 1951, the Congress can, by concurrent resolution, repeal the act. That, to me, was more important than this issue of selective controls. The credit provision was more important than selective controls. And there was one other more important thing here, I think, than selective controls, and that is whether the cost of production should be controlled as well as the price of the commodities.

Now we have provided in conference what I think was the intent of both the House and the Senate in respect to tying the control of the cost of production with the price of the commodities.

On page 6 of the conference report in respect to price and wage stabilization you will find in subsection (b) of 402 a provision that when any controls are put on prices, the President shall control the cost of production. Of course, that includes wages.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. I offered an amendment on that in the House and used the words that the President, when he puts controls on prices, shall control wages. I note that the conference committee went back to the wording that the House committee originally brought in and said that he shall stabilize wages. I wonder if the gentleman would explain the reason for using different words in relating to prices and to wages. Is there any significance in the use of the word "stabilization"?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not any more than there is in the stabilization of prices. This bill is intended to set up the machinery under which our economy may be stabilized.

Mr. POAGE. Then why did they not use the same wording as to prices and as to wages?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because it would not be advisable to freeze wages any more than it is advisable to freeze prices. So long as you have the provision in this bill which authorizes the President—and it was in both bills—to make adjustments, to correct inequities, and to remove hardships, then of course it follows you have given him authority to stabilize prices and stabilize wages. Unless you did have that in there you would not be able to do so.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BARDEN. When the bill was in the House we struck out title V. It went to the Senate. As I understand it title V is put on a voluntary basis, that is, after the Government and public have been considered. As I can further understand it, and if I am in error I hope the chairman will correct me, there can be no interference with the operations of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, and all other applicable laws bearing on this subject. That means, if I am correct, that there cannot be any board set up or commission set up, or any arrangements whereby either the Concilation Service of the Labor-Management Act or the Fair Labor Standards Act can be circumvented or nullified.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is absolutely correct. In order that there might be no question of the intent of the conferees in respect to that title, I wish to make a clarifying statement. At one point in the conference we were deadlocked on it. It seemed to be the key to whether they were going to get a bill out or not. I am more or less responsible for this language. In drafting the language and in submitting it to the conference, and the conference in adopting the language, intended that the President might initiate voluntary conferences only. Whether management and labor would even participate in such a conference was purely voluntary on their part. The President, after this voluntary conference might take such action as had been agreed upon voluntarily at the conference to effectuate the conclusions of the conference. It is my very definite interpretation of the language that the President may set up or may use any person or agency for the purpose of carrying out the agreements entered into voluntarily in this voluntarily created conference. There is nothing in the title which is designed, or which permits any action to be taken by the conference or by the President or any agency or person or board set up in consequence of this provision, which is contrary to any of the provisions of any of the existing laws in respect to labor.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McCONNELL. In connection with what the gentleman has just stated, is it his understanding that the sentence saying that the President may designate such persons or agencies as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title means that he is to be guided entirely in that designation by the action taken under this complete title V?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is my understanding, because the only thing which can be done under this title is the calling or initiating of this voluntary conference.

Mr. McCONNELL. They mention here in the descriptive part of the report on page 35 that the President would be authorized under this provision to establish a board, commission, or other agency similar to the War Labor Board of World War II to carry out the purposes of the title. It is my understanding that he could not designate such a board unless it was agreed to under the provisions of title V, is that correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is my very distinct understanding.

Mr. McCONNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say particularly one thing in respect to dates, because I do not want to be put in the position of having purposely misstated it. In respect to the date of termination, we provided that with respect to the exercise of priorities, allocation of authority to requisition materials for expansion of the productive capacity supply, titles 1, 2, 3, and 7 of the bill, that for the purpose of carrying out and performing contracts entered into previous to June 30, 1951, these titles would apply and be operative until June 30, 1952. This is merely to carry out contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1951.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise in any spirit of antagonistic controversy concerning this vital measure before us. Neither do I make any pretense of being able to recommend the exact detailed course we should follow to properly prepare our people to meet the terrible scourge of Communist aggression now going on in Korea, and God knows where tomorrow.

With no wish to introduce any additional unnecessary argument, I will, therefore, confine myself only to general treatment of this important problem of adequate defense legislation.

It appears to me that the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, committee members, and conferees have worked diligently and unceasingly, night and day, to present us with a reasonable bill; they are to be congratulated for their patriotic endeavor. I am most happy to observe the bipartisan approach of debate in this House and the evident wish of all Members to have the problem treated in an unprejudiced, nonpartisan fashion. It is a good omen for the times and the country.

I know our valiant soldiers in Korea, many of whom have already given their lives, and the people whom we individually represent, are turning their eyes toward us for leadership in this crisis. We must not fail them.

We have already discussed this problem fully. I earnestly feel there is need for expediency in our action.

It is my conviction that, on the whole, the committee bill and conference report embodying the recommendations of the Chief Executive, is an adequate and sufficient measure for the conditions currently existing. Of course, if current conditions change, then we can move accordingly. In that respect, I most earnestly urge that this Congress be kept in session without adjournment until this emergency is over.

The bill and report before us is all that is now asked by the President. It is approved by General Bradley and endorsed by Mr. Symington, Chairman of our National Security Resources Board. Let us not lose sight of the fact that the President has the machinery in the Commodity Credit Corporation to control food and clothing. We have in this measure, first, provisions for voluntary controls of wages and prices. I do not think anyone will dispute the fact that if we can work under the system of voluntary cooperation, it is, by far, the better and wiser way to proceed. If it does not succeed, by any chance, then there is power in this bill for the President to impose selective controls—selective controls on prices and wages in the industries affected. If a price ceiling is placed on a commodity, and threatened wage increases would interfere with the production of the commodity under the ceiling, ceilings may then be put on the wages to tie in prices and wages so that production may continue. In the event that both of the methods outlined above fail, then the Commander in Chief, at his option, can exercise over-all controls.

The remaining titles of H. R. 9176 are substantially what the President has asked for to combat inflation. They are allocation and priority authority, the right to requisition, consumer credit control, and the authority to make loans for industrial expansion and production.

It seems to me the powers set forth in this measure are, for this time, reasonable, moderate, and thoroughly American. In our anxiety to cover this necessity of defense preparation, let us be careful we do not unnecessarily inflict the very regimentation and restrictions of individual freedom contained in the diabolical communistic philosophy we are fighting.

It seems to me that this program is both logical and effective as things are now. We certainly need expedition in the passing of this bill. It is obvious that there is on the horizon a vicious spiraling of prices and wages chasing each other which can only bring disaster to the country. It is absolutely essential that we effectively meet this condition which is steadily growing worse.

In your everyday life you know what is happening. You know everything is rising in price all the time. The purchasing power of the dollar is depreciating so that those who work for wages, those who work for salaries are at a great disadvantage. Those who are living on fixed incomes, see their income disappearing. That is a condition we must stop immediately, because it is not only destructive to the welfare of our wage earners, but it is also destructive to the economy of our Nation. We must retain the just purchasing power of our dollar in order to insure that our Government, which means the people, is not defrauded in the tremendous purchases that must be made if we are forced into the prosecution of an extended war.

Right now, I wish to state my belief that an effective excess-profits tax should be imposed as soon as possible as the cornerstone of a tax program which will, as nearly as practicable, place us on a pay-as-you-go basis. It is absurd to talk for one minute of imposing price and wage controls without, at the same time, imposing an excess-profits tax. When we speak of a new system of taxes on our individual citizens to help pay for our war program we should also reimpose a substantial excess-profits tax which, in my conviction, should be based on current earnings. Today, and as long as this emergency period continues, we must persistently strive for as nearly a balanced budget as we can get. In my opinion there should be no objection to a true "excess" profits tax, because war is not, never has been, and never should be a game of profit for anyone and, I think, I am expressing the feeling of every fighting military man when I make that statement.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken a little longer than I really intended, but my heart and mind are filled with this subject. I have supreme confidence that ninety-nine and nine-tenths percent of the people in this country are truly patriotic, ready, and willing to make the severe sacrifices it appears we will be called upon to endure, for God knows how long. With faith in the Almighty and united effort by all individuals and segments in this beloved country, I am sure we will succeed in this gigantic task before us.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, events since June 25, 1950, show there is little time for us to erect a fortress of might to deter the Kremlin from expanding in other soft spots in the world.

What has happened in Korea must not be permitted to happen elsewhere. We must make ourselves so strong that the Soviet totalitarians will not dare to overrun established governments. The cry of the hour is men and arms and a resolve that totalitarianism must not advance.

Never again must we fool ourselves into believing that because we have the greatest potential strength of any nation on earth that others will not dare attack us. It is folly to say 2 years after trouble begins we can establish the mightiest army and the most horrible of military weapons in quantities large enough to destroy any enemy The time is now.

The urgency is today. We do not have an enemy who will give us 2 years to establish complete military mastery. What we need is a big stick now and a loud, clear voice.

New troubles may break out anywhere—in Iran, Germany, Indochina, Tibet. We are wasting brain power trying to fathom where the next blow will land. We are suddenly on the defensive only a few short months after proclaiming loudly to the world that if the Soviets attack at 4 a. m., we would defeat them that same day.

We have no business being on the defensive. The Communist doctrine has always been one of expansionism. We cannot blame anyone else for our sad state today. But we can show that henceforth we mean business.

I believe that the time has come to approach this problem head-on and not as we have so far. The danger is ever present. It will not recede until we show we are strong enough to halt it. And if we are strong, perhaps we can avoid world war III. That must be our immediate goal.

There is only one answer, and that is to mobilize our entire population in this struggle. We need universal military training today and not in some future Congress when—and I quote one of our leaders—"There will not be so many other issues up for consideration." Our army must reach several millions in the shortest possible time.

We will need all-out priority controls to allocate materials to defense plants and to essential civilian users. For those remaining supplies, we will need a price-control system so that everyone will have an opportunity to share what can be spared. We must pass legislation imediately to take all profits out of this gigantic, self-sacrificing effort. We must have no new defense millionaires, while our population is reducing its standard of living.

If plans for a rapid expansion of our military potential are acted upon with a daring and speed we know our great country is capable of, then, and only then, will we be able to force the Communist hordes back to the dark ages from whence they emerged.

The time has come for action. The future of democracy is at stake. The welfare of our families, the hopes we have for eventual peace, higher standards of living throughout the world, friendship among all races and honor among men—these are at stake today. Let us not falter or plan too meagerly.

INFLATION CONTROL VITAL

Mr. ELATNIK. Mr. Speaker, wholesale prices have increased by over 10 percent since the beginning of the Korean affair, and retail prices are following suit. Unless Congress acts vigorously to prevent further price rises this inflationary spiral that is developing will undermine our economy and wreck the living standard of the American people. It is for this reason that the inflation-control provisions written into this bill (H. R. 9176) directly affect the welfare of every American for better or worse.

In addition to authorizing the President to allocate scarce materials and restrict credit, the inflation-control provisions of this measure will permit the Chief Executive to control prices and wages through three methods: (1) Voluntary agreements between labor and industry; (2) establishment of selective controls, with prices and wages to be frozen at the same time; and (3) all-out mandatory ceilings on wages and prices.

I need not comment on the value of voluntary schemes for controlling inflation—voluntary controls have always failed in the past, and will fail again. So I will confine my remarks to the President's authority to establish selective and over-all price-wage freezes.

Perhaps the price-wage authority found in this bill will retard inflation, but I am convinced that further price rises are certain to occur within the framework of this law, and that the people's living standards will suffer as a result. The cause is obvious—the bill does not clearly spell out the President's power to roll back prices to June 25 levels. Instead, it merely says that the President shall give consideration to previous price levels. This vague language apparently means that the President lacks authority to roll back prices.

I also want to strongly protest against the unworkable and inequitable provision of this bill which states that if price ceilings are established the President must also freeze wages. This price-wage freeze formula is nothing more than a Republican scheme to "let prices go up first and then freeze both prices and wages." It means, in effect, that the workers of America will be given a wage decrease in terms of real wages and that the burden of inflation is being shifted to the backs of the low-income groups. It is the same old GOP story—more profits for big business but smaller incomes for the worker and the farmer.

Mr. Speaker, the present inflationary spiral must be stopped, and the price gouging and profiteering now being practiced by big business must be curbed. Congressional action is needed over and above the provisions of this watered-down, compromise inflation-control measure. I am convinced that the following program is needed to control inflation, and I now recommend this program to the Congress:

First. The President should be given authority to roll back both wholesale and retail prices to June 15 levels.

Second. Existing rent controls should be strengthened, and those rental areas which have been decontrolled during the past 3 years should be recontrolled wherever it is found that housing shortages exist.

Third. The President should be given power to impose rationing of those consumer goods in which shortages may occur.

Fourth. Congress should immediately impose an excess-profits tax on corporate profits, and sharply increase the income tax in the upper brackets to stop profiteering.

Fifth. Legislation should be adopted to limit speculation on the stock and commodity exchanges.

Sixth. Personally, I have always been opposed to wage controls because they usually work out to the detriment of labor standards, and I am still opposed to such controls in principle. Assuming, however, that wage controls are going to be imposed, I do insist that they be established only after the previous wage-price balance has been restored by a price roll-back to June levels. Moreover, any wage ceiling should be elastic enough to permit wage adjustments whenever necessary to protect the real wages of the worker.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, this control bill is one of the most important pieces of legislation enacted at the present session. It affects the living of 150,000,000 Americans. It places tremendous power and authority in the hands of one man. I do not understand why the leadership of the House and Senate—those in charge of the administration—have insisted that so much selective control is granted in this legislation and so much power given to the President.

It seems to me that when controls are made effective you will need to go all the way; otherwise the whole thing will be inequitable and will be unfair to various groups of people, including labor, industry, business—in fact the general public. Whether this legislation proves satisfactory will depend upon its administration and the administration has certainly been given blank check authority in this bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks during the consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLE of Kansas moves to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference for further study.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit, offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN), there were—ayes 20, noes 155.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present, and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum. The motion is not agreed to.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS IN THE RECORD

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House shall have the privilege until September 11, 1950, to extend and revise their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on more than one subject, if they so desire, and also to include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extension of remarks.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Does that include both the Appendix and the body of the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The request related to the Appendix.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

INDUCTION OF MEDICAL, DENTAL, AND ALLIED SPECIALISTS

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4029) to amend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, so as to provide for special registration, classification, and induction of certain medical, dental, and allied specialist categories, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of August 31, 1950.)

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, as the statement will disclose, the viewpoint of the House prevailed in the conference; that is, the bill is practically agreed to as it passed the House. We did change the word "doctors" and call them "physicians"; and we tried to broaden the function of the advisory committee. That is the only thing that happened in conference.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

JURISDICTION CONFERRED ON COURTS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK WITH RESPECT TO CIVIL ACTIONS BETWEEN INDIANS

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 192) to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of August 31, 1950.)

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DESIGNATION OF ACTING CLERK

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read by the Clerk:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., September 1, 1950.

The Honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Desiring to be temporarily absent from my office, I hereby designate Mr. H. H. Morris, an official in my office, to sign any and all papers and do all other acts for me which he would be authorized to do by virtue of this designation and of clause 4, rule III, of the House.

Respectfully,

RALPH R. ROBERTS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

MEETINGS OF THE HOUSE UNTIL SEPTEMBER 11

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next; that when the House adjourns on Tuesday next it adjourn to meet on Friday, September 8, 1950; that when the House adjourns on Friday, September 8, 1950, it adjourn to meet on the following Monday, September 11, 1950.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZATION TO RECEIVE MESSAGES AND SIGN ENROLLED BILLS OR JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until Tuesday next the Clerk be authorized to receive messages from the Senate and that the Speaker or Speaker pro tempore be authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

MEETING PLACE OF THE HOUSE ON AND AFTER SEPTEMBER 5

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 838

Resolved, That when this House adjourns on Friday, September 1, 1950, it will adjourn to meet in the caucus room in the New House Office Building on Tuesday, September 5, 1950, and it shall continue to meet there until otherwise ordered.

Resolved, That all rules relating to the Hall of the House shall be applicable to the caucus room.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee just secured a unanimous-consent request that the House recess tonight until next week, and that there be 3-day recesses until a week from next Monday. At those sessions, will speeches be permitted and will there be any business transacted excepting to meet and adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that the Speaker pro tempore will have the right to name conferees and receive messages. Otherwise the House will meet, prayer will be offered, the Journal will be read, and the House will then adjourn.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the Chair.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, on August 30, on roll call No. 263, the RECORD indicates that I was absent when the vote was taken on the Patterson resolution. I wish to state I was present and voted for the resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD and Journal be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. IRVING. Mr. Speaker, I was present at all roll calls yesterday, but in checking the RECORD this morning I find that roll call 267 shows I was absent. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was in New York City attending a session of the United Nations Security Council, engaged in official work; hence I was absent from the floor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JACKSON of Washington asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks and include an essay.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. BLACKNEY (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. SADLAK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. CANNON (at the request of Mr. BATES of Kentucky) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter from the Director of the Budget.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in 3 instances.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order which I have for today be incorporated in the RECORD immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK] on the invasion of Poland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order which I have for today be transferred to Monday, September 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

THE SACRED CAUSE OF POLAND

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, today marks the eleventh anniversary of the iniquitous Nazi attack on Poland. In that unspeakable infamy the gallant and noble Polish people became the first, in the then free world, to feel the bitter sting of the tyrant's lash in World War II. Thus, a brave, free nation, embracing a peace-seeking, liberty-loving, devoted Christian people, was brutally assaulted by international brigands, who disregarded all the laws of God and man and contravened the expressed terms of existing and valid nonaggression pacts.

It will be recalled that at that time, Poland was a member in good standing of the League of Nations and an ally of France and Great Britain. Her people had struggled long and sacrificed bitterly to establish their free Government. Yet, without provocation and without warning, Hitler's hordes attacked Poland on September 1, 1939, just as the Soviet-led, Moscow-directed forces of North Korea attacked the democratic-minded people of South Korea about 2 months ago.

The duplicity and treachery behind this attack on Poland constitutes one of the blackest pages in world history. Although at the time pretending friendship for Poland, Stalin approved the Soviet-German Treaty and connived with Hitler by ordering his own troops to invade Poland on September 17, 1939. This treacherous act effectually prevented the armed forces of Poland from putting up effective resistance to the Nazi invaders. What followed is history. At a later meeting at Moscow, attended by representatives of the Nazi and Soviet states, Poland was put on the carving block and cut up between Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia.

In the meantime, one great aggressor against freedom has been dispatched by force of arms. Has that fact stopped aggression in the world? It has not. In place of the old one a new and even more widely spread and subtly organized aggressor lifts his ugly head and casts a cloud upon freedom-loving peoples throughout the world. Hitler has been liquidated but Stalin has taken his place preaching the gospel of hate against his fellow man and carrying the torch of rebellion, insurrection and conspiracy to the far corners of the earth. This new aggressor, which now menaces the peace of the entire world, has already, by various means, acquired not only helpless, defenseless Poland but twelve other great independent nations, including China.

It is to the everlasting credit and glory of the Polish people that they have never surrendered their rights, they have never forfeited their freedom, they have never bowed to enslavement, they have never

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Oregon completely agrees with the Senator from Texas, and desires to ask the Senator from Texas whether he will not move for a reconsideration of the action taken, because it is perfectly obvious to all that there should have been a quorum call before a vote on a question of this kind, which has held the attention of the Senate for days, and there should be a record vote on it. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that he move that the vote be reconsidered.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I probably shall do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I call attention to the fact that all day yesterday there were discussions going on as to when we might have a vote upon the amendment. Last evening for 1 hour and 15 minutes the Senate was engaged in a futile colloquy in an effort to fix a time at which the vote could be taken.

I think it was generally understood that this is a matter of such grave importance that there should be a yea-and-nay vote of the Senate upon it. The Senator from Wyoming, who was seated in the Chamber, was called to another part of the Chamber while the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] was still speaking. As I passed the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Texas was on his feet apparently asking for recognition. I thought the Senator was about to make some more comments upon the amendment. Apparently that was not the fact, but he was seeking to ask for the yeas and nays. The question was stated immediately after the sudden termination of the address of the Senator from Colorado. In all the circumstances, Mr. President, I feel that it will be quite proper for us to ask the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado not to take advantage of the parliamentary situation which now exists, but to agree that there may be a yea-and-nay vote, without the necessity of making the motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute amendment has now been agreed to.

It seems to me the vital significance of this matter is so well recognized that the sponsors of the substitute amendment will agree to have the record of a yea-and-nay vote upon this issue.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be a yea-and-nay vote upon this issue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the substitute amendment was agreed to be reconsidered, and that the yeas and nays be had upon the substitute. Is there objection?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the vote is to be taken without further debate we will not object to it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to finish my remarks upon the subject. I shall want to take about 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall have to object then, unless the Senator is ready to conclude.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am ready to conclude in about 5 minutes. I have not taken up much time in this debate. I have spoken only once.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me make a modification so the matter can be settled; I ask that the Senator from Texas may be permitted to conclude his remarks within 5 minutes, and that we may then have reconsideration with a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, we have no objection if we can secure a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want Senators to know what they are voting on. They are voting on a delaying, rear-guard action in connection with this issue. No one is going to be fooled by the talk about more time, and more time, to study the matter. The subject has been before the Congress for years, and anyone who wishes to understand it can easily understand it if he will consult the record.

It is now proposed to put the matter off. It is said, "We want more time. We want to study the matter." Both the eminent Senators from Georgia and from Colorado have been doing nothing else than studying this subject. They have been studying it since they have had it before them, but not with the thought of advancing it, but to slow it up, to put the brakes on a little tighter. Mr. President, they want to put it off for several months. We cannot put off the Korean war for several months. It is here now. We cannot put off the demand and the necessity for increased taxes. But Senators can put off taxing profiteers who are growing rich while all other citizens are being taxed at a higher rate than they paid last year.

Talk about the little man. Someone said something about small business. Under this bill the man with an $800-a-year income is going to pay more taxes than he paid last year; the man with a thousand-dollar-a-year income is going to pay more than he paid last year; but the taxes of the profiteer who is going to make more money, tremendously more money than he made last year, will in effect be decreased on the basis of the mass of his earnings. No, Mr. President, let no one fool himself about this matter. If Senators are for an excess-profits tax, let them vote down the George-Millikin amendment. If they are against an excess-profits tax let them vote for it.

Mr. President, I used to practice law. I used to have some criminal cases now and then. Every time we had a hard case, a difficult case, we made a motion for a continuance. That, in effect, is what is now being done here. The George-Millikin amendment is, in effect, a motion for a continuance. When we practiced law we made such motions in the hope that some of the witnesses would die, in the hope that some of them would leave the country, in the hope that something would happen in order to make our defense more safe. What we have now is in effect a motion for a continuance. If Senators want to adopt such tactics, let them vote for the George-Millikin amendment, but if they are for an excess-profits tax, let them vote it down.

We have had plenty of time to consider this question. The Senate can act on it and adopt some sort of amendment on this subject. The amendment can be worked out in conference between the House and the Senate conferees. We can devise an income-tax amendment. But the Senator from Colorado is so anxious, so very anxious, to get an excess-profits tax that he wants to study the subject during the interval between now and next January.

No, Mr. President, let us not fool ourselves. The issue is before us. If Senators are for an excess-profits tax, let them vote down the substitute amendment. If Senators do not want an excess-profits tax, let them vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered by unanimous consent. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hill	Malone
Anderson	Hoey	Martin
Benton	Holland	Maybank
Bricker	Humphrey	Millikin
Butler	Hunt	Morse
Byrd	Ives	Mundt
Capehart	Jenner	Murray
Chapman	Johnson, Colo.	Myers
Chavez	Johnson, Tex.	Neely
Connally	Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney
Darby	Kefauver	Pepper
Donnell	Kem	Robertson
Douglas	Kerr	Russell
Dworshak	Kilgore	Saltonstall
Ecton	Knowland	Smith, Maine
Ellender	Langer	Smith, N. J.
Ferguson	Leahy	Sparkman
Frear	Lehman	Stennis
Fulbright	Lodge	Thomas, Okla.
George	Long	Thomas, Utah
Gillette	Lucas	Thye
Graham	McCarran	Watkins
Green	McClellan	Wherry
Gurney	McFarland	Williams
Hendrickson	McKellar	Withers
Hickenlooper	McMahon	Young

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the George-Millikin substitute for the O'Mahoney-Connally amendment.

Those who favor the substitute will, as their names are called, vote "yea."

Those who oppose the substitute will, as their names are called, vote "nay."

The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senators from Maryland [Mr.

O'CONOR and Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is absent by leave of the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] on this vote. If present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea," and the Senator from Washington would note "nay."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Arizona would vote "nay," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea," and the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is absent because of illness, and, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a temporary alternate Governor of the World Bank.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maine would vote "yea" and the Senator from Vermont would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea" and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—42

So the George-Millikin substitute for the O'Mahoney-Connally amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate has agreed to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Georgia to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as amended by the substitute.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 192) to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4029) to amend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, so as to provide for special registration, classification, and induction of certain medical, dental, and allied specialist categories, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

(For conference report see pp. 14223–14231 of House proceedings, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 31, 1950.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. It has been very difficult to hear, owing to the confusion in the Senate Chamber. What is now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report on the so-called controls bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a few questions.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to make a brief statement. We have labored long, and we have labored hard, since July 19, in fact, in an effort to bring to the Senate and to the House a measure which might be agreed upon. I think my friends on the other side of the aisle will agree to that. We have before us a conference report which was agreed to by the House, with but 20 votes for recommittal. We have here a report with many different provisions. I feel every Senator probably has a question or a doubt about one section or another of the report. I have myself. It has been necessary to effectuate a compromise. All labor requires compromise between the Senate and House. For instance, the conferees omitted the Senate provision regarding confirmation of regional officers or State officers. The conferees on the part of the Senate have yielded to the House on certain things, and the House conferees have yielded to us on certain other things. The members of the conference, knowing the situation which exists in the world and having heard the testimony yesterday afternoon in executive session given by those in charge of munitions and those in charge of other important Government programs, believe that controls in the case of those programs should be extended until 1952, particularly titles 1, 2, and 3, which the President requested.

When it comes to title 4, the conference determined unanimously that the expiration date should be June 30, 1951, which would be less than 10 months.

I shall be happy to answer any questions that any Senator may desire to ask, but I hope the conference report will be agreed to by the Senate, as it has been agreed to by the House.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read a statement which I have prepared on the subject now before the Senate. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may have it printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN

Mr. President, the conference report on the defense production bill of 1950, now before the Senate, gives the President of the United States unlimited power to impose ceilings over prices and wages as he deems necessary, to restrict consumer credit, to establish priorities and allocations for critical materials, to requisition and control inventories, and to provide for the expansion of the production and supply of materials for defense.

When the President sent his message to Congress, he did not ask for the power to fix prices and wages. He stated that these powers were not necessary. Later the President stated that if Congress desired to give him these specific powers he would be glad to accept them on his terms.

He stated that this grant of power must be so broad that he could fix prices and wages either on a selective basis or generally, and that the method of administration should be left free to the executive branch of Government. He also stated that he should be given exclusive jurisdiction in determining which agency or agencies were to administer all or part of the priority and allocation program.

When the defense production bill was before the Senate, it was the sense of this body that priorities and allocations should be administered by one agency, and we designated that agency—the Department of Commerce.

The great majority in the Senate felt that if the power to fix prices and wages was to be exercised effectively it must be general and not selective. We also felt that in order to stabilize our economy, prices and wages must be fixed simultaneously. The bill which passed the Senate made these points clear.

In a recent State-wide broadcast to the people of Pennsylvania, I said I had great fears of inflation unless effective controls were placed and placed now to protect the consumers of our Nation.

I said then and I repeat now:

"Everyone knows that prices are constantly moving upward. With increased Government spending for defense they will rush even higher. Labor is already demanding wage increases to meet the rising cost of living. Artificial shortages have been created by some unscrupulous businessmen to extort higher profits from the public.

"Unless controls are put into effect at once, clear across the board, we will have a race between prices and wages that will mean a dangerous inflation.

"Let me say that we cannot have wage control without price control. Neither can we have effective price control without wage control. They must go together."

In other words, Mr. President, if we are to halt runaway spiraling of the cost of living, controls must be placed simultaneously on both prices and wages, clear across the board.

In my opinion that is the only system of controls which have any chance of working.

The conference report, Mr. President, gives the power to the President to do the job piece meal, as he may see fit. It gives him the power to use selective controls. In my opinion this will not and cannot work.

It will be a rank failure and must end in confusion all along the line.

Reading the conference report gives the impression that when the President establishes a ceiling on prices he must at the same time establish a ceiling on wages. But a more careful examination of this report leads me to the opinion that the President may place a ceiling on prices, and that ceiling may be a roll-back, but he has no authority to roll-back wages.

Paragraph 5 of section 402B states:

"In stabilizing wages under paragraph 3 of this subsection the President shall issue regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation."

All the President can do is to prohibit increases and nothing more. And mark you this, he need only prohiibt increases in wages "which he deems would require increases in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequalities on sellers operating under the price ceiling."

It is my contention that paragraph 5 is by way of explanation and limitation of the prior subsection. The President does not have to fix wages, salaries, and compensation simultaneously with the fixing of price ceilings although section 3 says he must. Section 5 nullifies section 3.

In approving this conference report the Congress is merely acting as a rubber stamp. We are surrendering our power to legislate to the executive branch of Government. We are saying to the executive branch, we are giving you the authority to make all the decisions. We are surrendering to you by default our congressional power to determine when, if, and how controls and ceilings should be imposed. We are saying to the President, you may invoke as little control as you wish or as much control as you wish. You may invoke it when you wish. You may do it piece meal or otherwise.

We are saying to him you may impose price ceilings but not wage ceilings before the election if you think that is a good idea. Under this bill he may delay all action indefinitely.

The Constitution of the United States places upon Congress the responsibility for making the laws and empowers the President to execute them.

The Constitution makes no provision for Congress to sign a blank check so that the executive branch of Government can fill in the amount and the terms.

It seems to me that when we approve this conference report we are signing a blank check permitting the executive branch of the Government to fill in the amount and the terms of that check.

Mr. President, if the Congress of the United States is to carry out its function as a truly legislative body we should have the courage to pass a bill with complete and clearly stated provisions to meet the present situation immediately and effectively.

If we want to abdicate our powers and responsibilities the way to do it is to delegate the legislative function of Government to the President.

Mr. President, although I am not in agreement with the conference report in its entirety I shall vote for it in the hope that the President will exercise the broad powers granted to him in accordance with the views of the Senate as expressed in the Senate bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MAYBANK. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. It is very difficult to know all that is in the report or to know exactly what has been done. I am vitally interested in three or four amendments, Not having had an opportunity to study the report closely, I should like to ask a few questions. As the conference report comes to the Senate, we find on page 6, section 402 (b) the following language:

To the extent that the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a)—

That is the voluntary plan—

the President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service—

I come now to the language which, as I understood, was inserted by the conferees—and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

In the next paragraph, subparagraph 2, if I read it correctly, it is provided that action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to any individual materials, and so forth, "or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally." I desire to ask the distinguished Senator first, does not the conference report come to the Senate with this new section, written by the conferees, which provides selective price control?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is entirely correct. It comes to the Senate with a new section, but it represents the writing of a section in the nature of a compromise between the House language and the Senate language.

Mr. WHERRY. For the benefit of at least my thinking, I should like to pursue the colloquy further. As the bill left the Senate, we had a section 402 (a) under which the President may encourage and promote voluntary controls in keeping with our free economy. If voluntary controls fail, the Senate bill then provided that the President may apply mandatory controls, and in so doing price ceilings must be applied across the board, and ceilings on wages must be established at the same time.

I should next like to ask the distinguished Senator about the language in the conference report which refers to the changes which have been made in section 402 (b) of the Senate bill.

In section 402 (b), subsection (1), my question is, What is the meaning of the word "stabilizing"? The Senate bill authorized ceilings on prices and ceilings on wages. We come now to the word "stabilizing," which was stricken from the Senate bill. Let me read it. I merely want to get the interpretation of the conferees. It may help a little in connection with the legislative history. I refer to the last line on page 6, which reads: "and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages." What does that mean? Does "stabilizing" mean a ceiling would be imposed on wages, as provided in the bill when it left the Senate, or does it mean that there is to be a fluctuation back and forth?

Mr. MAYBANK. As written in the report it means a fixing of wages.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator mean to fix wages, as intended by the language of the Wherry-Bricker amendment? Is that what is intended by the word "stabilizing"?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should prefer to have the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Ohio answer that question.

Mr. WHERRY. I think the Senator can give me the answer.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] or the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] to answer that question.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator please tell me what he understands it to be?

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand it to be authority to prohibit any increase in wages.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I am asking the questions. I asked the chairman of the committee first. Then I should like to ask the ranking minority member of the committee his views, and then I should be glad to have any other Senator who wants to answer the question——

Mr. MAYBANK. I have expressed my views.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, all I can say is that it was the intention of the conferees and the intention of the language to have "stabilization" mean just what it says. It means that the President will control wages and prices.

Mr. WHERRY. Does it mean that he will fix wages immediately when price ceilings are imposed? I understand the answer of the Senator from South Carolina is that that is correct.

Mr. CAPEHART. The conference report provides, on page 6, paragraph (b) (1), that—

> The President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service, and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

Mr. WHERRY. That is largely the language of the Senate bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I am sure the distinguished Senator from Nebraska will not mind my interrupting him. That is the same language, in substance, which the Senate approved and which was in effect in World War II. I just wanted to make the RECORD clear in that respect.

Mr. CAPEHART. I think the language is perfectly clear. At the same time the President shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of the subsection.

Mr. WHERRY. I am only asking the definition of the distinguished Senator from Indiana of the word "stabilizing," as written in the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. It means that the President shall fix the wages, and he has the right, in connection with both wages and prices, to take care of hardship cases.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that.

Mr. CAPEHART. When I voted, as one of the conferees, it was with the understanding that the President would fix wages and compensation and would freeze them.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to ask with reference to the last remark of the Senator from Indiana, when he used the word "freeze," whether "freeze" and "stabilizing" mean the same thing?

Mr. CAPEHART. That is my understanding, and I think it is the understanding of the conferees.

Mr. FERGUSON. May I ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina if that is his understanding?

Mr. MAYBANK. My understanding of the section is that it is very similar to that which was adopted in World War II.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has already said exactly what the Senator from Indiana said.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to any Senator, but I want to save time. I am not interested in going any further with the questions, unless some Senator wants me to yield, because I am satisfied that the interpretation has now become legislative history. I am satisfied with the definition. I am trying to get a clear interpretation of what is meant by the conference report as it comes back to the Senate. The report discloses that the conferees have done a great deal of work. They have written many provisions of completely new legislation. I am only trying to find out their interpretation of what they meant to do. I think that should be known for the benefit of the Senate.

Let me refer to section 2 on page 7 of the report. This is all new language:

> Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally.

That is, the President of the United States has the right, under this section, immediately to adopt selective controls or to adopt general controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Reading further:

> A ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds—

And there are five restrictions. I shall not read them all, but I want to ask this question: How is the cost of living to be determined—according to the Department of Labor statistics cost-of-living index, or by some other gage or some other measure? I ask that question with reference to these five restrictions, where it is attempted to establish that "such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense."

Mr. MAYBANK. I would say, in answer to the question of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, that it would be according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, although we found in the hearings that sometimes they are a little late because of lack of funds, which I hope we shall remedy.

Mr. WHERRY. Then it will be determined by the figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics?

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me make it plain to the Senator from Nebraska that sometimes they are a little late, and it might be necessary to secure additional information.

Mr. WHERRY. But, primarily, the figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics will be the yardstick by which the cost of living will be determined?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; those figures would be taken into consideration. The Bureau of Labor Statistics people say that they are sometimes a month behind, and other statistics or figures could be taken into consideration.

Mr. WHERRY. I have another question to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee.

In subparagraph (3), on page 7, the language is as follows:

> Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material—

I take it that is under selective controls—> or service, the President shall stibilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

I am aware of the fact that the so-called Wherry formula is out of this bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHERRY. Let me finish, please. What I want to know is this: If any product is placed under selective price and wage controls as herein provided, will the control extend as well to the essential supplies and services which are interrelated to the production of the originally controlled material? I should like to have the Senator from South Carolina or the Senator from Virginia or the Senator from Indiana answer that question.

Mr. MAYBANK. I will say to my good friend from Nebraska that the reason why we have put selective controls in rather than over-all controls is that we were hopeful that we would not have to have over-all controls. We may have to have them. But if we provided for over-all controls across the board, it would necessitate some 65,000 persons being employed and a large sum of money in connection with their employment. So this plan was adopted.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], Representative WOLCOTT, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] tried to work something out, and what they suggested was better than anything I had been able to work out. I suggest that the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Virginia answer the question.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. When the conferees met, the very first problem which confronted them was this inherent conflict between the House and the Senate bills. The House bill provided for selective controls. The Bricker-Wherry amendment, adopted by a vote of 50 to 36, prohibited selective controls. We took up minor issues, but each time we would return to the main issue. We were absolutely deadlocked on that, and it looked as if we would have no bill at all. I asked the chairman of the committee if we could go back and get instructions of the Senate as to whether to yield or not to yield, and he said we could not. The House could do that, but we would have to report a failure and ask for new conferees to be appointed. In the emergency, at 10 o'clock at night——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate that, and I am not at all belittling or attempting to criticize. I am simply asking, when the conferees arrived at their decision, what the interpretation was. The question I am asking has not a thing to do with the Wherry-Bricker amendment providing controls across the board. I have reference to subsection 3 of section 402 (b) as written in the conference report. Perhaps the Senator from Virginia did not understand my question. The subsection reads:

Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material, or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries and other compensation in the industry—

I emphasize "in the industry"—

or business producing the material or performing the service.

That is the point I should like to have cleared up in my mind.

Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. ROBERTSON, and Mr. CAPEHART addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall yield first to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I shall be glad to tell the Senator what it means. By the original suggestion which I framed with the help of Representative WOLCOTT—and I do not know what happened to that language, or how it got out of the conference report—we wanted to make it crystal clear that wage control and price control would be tied together, and both had to be exercised at the same time.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the Senator from Virginia finish his explanation. What the Senator has said is not what I have in mind.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I must give the Senator the background.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not think the background is necessary.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If I do not give the Senator the background, I cannot answer his question. When we first met in committee we were faced by the issue of whether or not we would tie wage controls to price controls. I suggested we use the same language which had heretofore been used, but the conferees who were familiar with the language which had been used in previous acts and all acts of Congress relating to wages, said, "You can put a price on an article which is composed of a raw material that has been processed. Labor is a part of the price that you finally fix on that article. When you control the wage you call it a stabilization act under which you stabilize a price. You stabilize it by saying that after you have fixed the price there shall not be an increase in the labor cost of that industry which would break through the ceiling you have fixed, or impose a hardship or inequity upon the producer of the price-fixed article."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that is not the question I asked.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment. I want to have the point clarified.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have an answer to my question. I will ask the question again.

Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. MAYBANK, and Mr. ROBERTSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I will ask the question of the Senator from Indiana. I want to know what is in the minds of the conferees. I want to know how they interpret the act. This act is very vital to the economy of the country, and I should like to ask a few pertinent questions. Apparently the Senator from Virginia——

Mr. MAYBANK. I can answer the questions.

Mr. WHERRY. I will ask them of the Senator from Indiana. If any product—and therefore wages—is placed under selective control, will the control extend, as a result, to the essential supplies and services which are interrelated—I say "interrelated," Mr. President—with the production of the originally controlled product? Let me give the Senator an example. If steel ingots are controlled, will prices and wages in the production of the ore be controlled? Or, if ceilings are placed on meat at the consumer level, will the prices and wages in the raising of the cattle be controlled? Will it be controlled in the pens, where cattle is still on the hoof? Will it be controlled at the slaughtering-house level? How far back does the control go? If the price of meat is controlled—and corn is a part of the production of meat—will corn be controlled? Is the production of corn to be controlled? What is in the minds of the conferees in that respect?

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the Senator from Indiana answer the question.

Mr. CAPEHART. The answer to the able Senator's question is "No." It does not go as far as he suggested in his question. I should like to read the language of the subsection and explain what it does.

(3) Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material—

That could be ingots, steel, shoes, or anything——

Mr. WHERRY. And wages.

Mr. CAPEHART. I continue reading:

or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry——

Mr. WHERRY. Or business.

Mr. CAPEHART. I continue reading:

or business producing the material or performing the service.

When we talk about industry, we must remember that if the President freezes the price of steel, that action takes in all steel manufacturers.

Mr. WHERRY. From where? Where does the freezing begin?

Mr. CAPEHART. Just steel.

Mr. WHERRY. At the retail level, at the fabricating level, or at the ingot level?

Mr. CAPEHART. He can freeze it at the manufacturer's price. He can freeze it at the wholesale price. He can freeze it at the retail price. He can freeze it anywhere. He does not have to freeze it all along the line. If he freezes the manufacturer's price he does not have to freeze the wholesale price, or the retail price. He can do so, but he is not forced to do so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. May I supplement the answer of the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator from Indiana would like to have the Senator from Virginia make further comment with respect to the answer, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. CAPEHART. I should like to finish the answer, please.

He must stabilize or freeze the wages of the same group or same people producing the service or material on which he freezes the prices.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that wages will be stabilized at the time the price is frozen. What I am concerned with at this point is the language of the bill:

Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

What I want to know is how far back he would go. Let us take meat, for example. Assuming he puts a ceiling on meat at the consumer level, how far does he go?

Mr. ROBERTSON. He goes as far as is necessary to go to effectuate the purposes of the act. He starts at one place at a time. If the price on the finished steel is all that is necessary to have fixed, he stops there. If someone jumps the price on the iron ore in the meantime, and it becomes necessary to fix the price of iron ore, that price is fixed. Let us assume that some common sense will be used in the administration of the act. We must assume that some common sense and integrity will be shown in the administration of the act.

Mr. WHERRY. The same thing is true with respect to meat?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask all Senators to resume their seats. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Indiana. I understand he wishes to yield temporarily to the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A Senator may yield to only one Senator at a time.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana be permitted to yield to the Senator from Virginia to answer my question, without my losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I repeat that we must assume that common sense will be used and will control the actions of the administrators of the act. While we do not set it forth in subsection 3, it must be assumed that it would extend to every level that would be involved.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has answered my question. I thank him very much.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I said that the words suggested by me had been left out. I now see that they have not been left out. They appear at the bottom of page 6:

> To the extent that the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price—

And so forth.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. He has stated—and I assume the Senator from Indiana agrees—that subsection (3), which is under the selective control part of the bill, authorizes the President to stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service, and that represents authority to go clear back to the beginning, if necessary. It would include the mining of the iron ore, it would include rates of transportation, it would apply to the farmer getting his cattle, the farmer producing meat, all the way through.

Mr. CAPEHART. It would not apply to transportation, because that is exempted.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Indiana has suggested what I desired to inquire about.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would admonish the Senate that the Senator from Nebraska has the floor, and he can yield to but one Senator at a time. If the Senator from Nebraska will state to whom he is yielding, or whether he is declining to yield, the the Chair will try to see that the rule is followed.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield now to the distinguished chairman of the committee, as the Senator from Indiana has taken his seat.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Indiana that all public utilities are exempted, under State law.

Mr. CAPEHART. Common carriers.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we are making history here, and I want to know what is in the minds of the distinguished conferees. We have not had much chance to ge into the report, and I am vitally interested in it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. In a moment. I am not criticizing the conferees, I am merely trying to find out what is in their minds.

I have now been told that blanket authority is given to control prices in industry or a business producing materials, so that it would be possible to impose price ceilings and to stabilize wages in the case of those producing cattle which are finally slaughtered and processed and distributed, if ceilings are imposed at the consumer level, and the President feels, in his wisdom, that such price ceilings and the stabilization of wages should go clear down to all levels of meat production.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. In a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I desire to yield to the Senator from Minnesota, who has been on his feet for a long time, and rose after the Senator from Indiana took his seat. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. I thank the minority leader. The question that comes to my mind is this. At the time the control bill was first before the Senate we were led to believe that any time a regulation was imposed upon any industry, or upon a processor or upon a producer, they would have an opportunity to appear and testify, and that all facts relating to their business would be taken into consideration before rules and regulations were promulgated and imposed upon the industry or individual. Does that provision still remain in the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. I cannot find it in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. In a moment I will yield. I cannot find it in the bill, and that is one of the questions I want to have answered. It seems vital, if we are to give blanket authority to control prices and wages clear back to the origin, that each segment of an industry have an opportunity to make a showing before ceilings are imposed.

Mr. THYE. The very able chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], assured me emphatically that the producer, or the processor, or the manufacturer, anyone affected by a rule that would be imposed upon him relative to prices, would be heard before the Federal agency imposed regulations.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I certainly told the Senator from Minnesota about a month ago what I expected might be in the bill but as the Senator knows there have been many changes since the bill was introduced. The conference committee struck from the bill some of the amendments the Senate had included, and the House refused to go along on all the provisions referred to. We gave up some provisions in conference, and in the bill we are finally presenting we have only a general provision. We do not have all individual conditions or situations covered.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Let me quote the language.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me straighten it out with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Let me quote the language.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to make a short statement?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly; I have already yielded.

Mr. MAYBANK. This question has been before the Senate since the nineteenth of July. Many changes have come about; the worst changes have come about in the past 48 hours, and every Senator who is familiar with the situation knows that be so. In July I did make the hopeful statement to the Senator from Minnesota he has repeated, but some provisions of the earlier bill are not in the conference report. But what I hope in September is different, because the committee, the Senate and conferees, of both the House and the Senate, struck out much language. I say to the Senator that the provision to which I referred in July when I spoke to him is not in the bill. The Senator from Virgnia [Mr. ROBERTSON] has suggested that he read the language. I do not want the Senator from Minnesota to misunderstand me.

Mr. THYE. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a very brief comment?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. When price-control regulations were put on industries in World War II, frequently the industries, the processors' and producers' groups affected, said that common sense had not been exercised by the administrator of price controls at the time the regulations or rules were promulgated, and in order in the future to avoid action by some Federal agency concerning some which might say that common sense was not exercised, I felt it would be well worth-while to have a provision in the law which would make it necessary for the agency to call in the individuals affected in order that all the facts might be obtained, and a good, sound regulation pertaining to the control provisions or price levels could be written into the regulations before they were promulgated.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield, I will read the provision as it is in the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, in answer to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota about an opportunity to be heard upon a price-fixing regulation before it is issued, we inserted, as appears on page 10 of the conference report, section 404, as follows:

SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to say a word about that. That is an old provision. There is nothing new about it. All it does is to provide for the setting up of an advisory committee within an industry to consult with the President. That is not what I was talking about, and I am sure it is not what the Senator from Minnesota had in mind. What the Senator from Minnesota was discussing was exactly what the Senator from Nebraska was referring to. Before price ceilings are imposed on a great industry, the industry itself should have a right to come forward and testify as to the impact of the control. Such a provision is not in this bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Before the Senator says it is not in the bill, will he not read what the conference report provides?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not find it in the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Let me read section 709.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Virginia read section 404 as the answer to the Senator from Minnesota, and I say it is not the answer. If the provision is at some other place in the bill, I should be glad to have it pointed out. I was taking the answer the Senator from Virginia gave to the Senator from Minnesota as the answer to the question. If some other section covers the point, I shall be glad to have it pointed out, as I have said. I appreciate the interest of Senators in this matter.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The section is 709, and the Senator will find it on page 23 of the conference report. It reads:

Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that, in different language, is the same thing we have just been discussing.

Mr. President, it is the industrial advisers who have been consulted. Who are they? When such advisers came before the small-business committee we found that, generally, they told us only what was the effect of directives that had previously been issued. We are asking that before a price ceiling can be placed on the cattle industry, the cattle producer, he or his representative shall have the right to come to Washington to present his case. We want the right reserved to the producer or his duly selected representatives, to be given a hearing before a directive is ever issued whether the Government agency consults with an advisory committee appointed by the President or not.

What I am saying is exactly in line with the fight I made during the years when OPA was in effect. If such a provision is not made, there is going to be a pathway worn to Washington because representatives of industry and producers are coming to Washington anyway, and they are going to be heard. They have a right to be heard. Provision for such hearing should be included in the bill. If the conferees took the provision out of the bill, it is most unfortunate. And if the only answers we have are sections 404 and 709, which have been read by the Senator from Virginia, they do not suffice. As it now is, orders can be issued and regulations made without the representatives of the great industries coming to Washington to give the Government agencies the benefit of their knowledge, at the grassroot level, if you please, respecting how the orders to be issued may have an impact on industry.

I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency for his statement. He said he tried hard to uphold the position of the Senate. I realize that a conference report is the result of compromise. I am not condemning the conferees at all. If what is now brought to us is the best the conferees on the part of the Senate could obtain, very well. We might have obtained more had the matter been brought back to the Senate for a vote. I realize, however, the emergency situation. But certainly we have a right to have an interpretation of what is in the bill so we may know what to expect when selective control goes into effect.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no difference with the Senator from Nebraska on the so-called meat or beef situation. I have cooperated with him as best I could to obtain the adoption of what was known in the past as the Barkley-Bates amendment, as it was amended by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I voted for the Senate's position in conference. I do not want any misunderstanding to be had about that. But we had to make changes. In conference there has to be give and take, as the Senator so ably put it. I trust the conference report, as brought to the Senate, will be appreciated.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it is.

Mr. MAYBANK. I trust it will be appreciated and understood to be a compromise between the House and Senate conferees. The report contains some things which I do not favor and which the Senator from Nebraska does not favor. The report, however, contains other things which the House does not favor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senate 1 minute in considering the report, but I wish to have certain matters made clear.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to go back to the first point the Senator raised in connection with section 402 (b) (3).

Mr. WHERRY. We are still on that point.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; but then the Senator began to discuss the question of issuance of regulations, orders, and so forth.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] raised a question as to that and interrelated matters.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. I thought the Senator from Nebraska was preparing to go to a third subject.

Mr. WHERRY. No; I have other questions to ask.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am afraid the last statement the able Senator from Nebraska made with reference to the point he was discussing may have been somewhat misleading.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator refer to my statement?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. I should not say misleading, but the Senator's statement may not be altogether a true interpretation. I understood him to say it was his interpretation that the language meant that when the President invokes price controls upon a particular item, that means, according to the way I understood the Senator from Nebraska, to cover the whole field, everything leading up to it. I want to bring out the point——

Mr. WHERRY. No; just a minute.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Very well, We may be in agreement, but I want to be sure we are.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not say that the President is obliged to cover the whole field.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is exactly the point.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not say that he would, but that he could. The language does give the President blanket authority, so that if in his wisdom he thinks it necessary, he can go clear back to the original producer. There is no argument about that at all.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I want to give an example. Let us suppose that price control is placed on steel. The President would, under this provision, be required immediately to place controls on wages.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is what it specifically means—wage controls on the workers in the production of steel. One of the fundamental elements in the making of steel is coal. The President would not have to control the wages of the miners who dig the coal. It might be that later on, if the price of coal went up, he would put price controls on coal, and when he did so, he would put controls on wages.

Mr. WHERRY. The authority is there.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The authority is there. But it is not mandatory on him that he do it all at once.

Mr. WHERRY. We are talking about a selective control act. This is a discretionary action on the part of the President. The bill provides that he can place price ceilings on the industry or on the business that produces the article on which he places the price ceiling. Let us consider cotton goods. Let us say that the gracious wife of the distinguished Senator from Alabama goes into a store to buy a yard of cotton goods, or this or that or the other. If the prices of such goods get out of line, the President can invoke price ceilings at the production level. If he feels that the price of the material is out of line he has authority to go as far back as the cotton farmer, if necessary, to impose price ceilings and stabilization of wages. Is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me make it clear. Let us put it this way. Suppose the price of cotton shirts or cotton goods is out of line, and the President places price controls on the textile product. Then he would be called upon to put wage controls upon the textile workers.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Very well. Let us take another step. If he put price control on cotton, then he could be expected to put wage controls upon those who produce the cotton.

Mr. WHERRY. I think we are in complete agreement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wanted to be certain we were.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the information which has been afforded us by the Senator's observations. He has been a very diligent worker on the committee. He has corroborated what has already been said. The Senator from Nebraska thoroughly understands the situation, which is, that in the bill the President is given discretionary power to impose a price ceiling and to stabilize wages. In doing so he can go back into the interrelated levels of industry or the business producing the material or performing the service that brings the commodity into being. There can be no mistake about that. I want to thank the Senators who have answered my questions.

I should like to ask one more question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, may I clear up one other misunderstanding?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, until now there has been no misunderstanding on the part of the Senator from Nebraska. I thoroughly agree with the interpretations which have been given.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does the Senator think that the Senate conferees yielded on some language mentioned by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]? I want to say that there was nothing of the kind mentioned by the Senator in the bill on which we could yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want to go into that matter, because the Senator from Minnesota made his observations on the basis of what was told him. But there is nothing in the bill, or the conference report, that permits the industry itself to come to Washington and have hearings. There is nothing in the conference report that permits the farmers from the cattle belt, the iron ore producers, the men from the cotton belt and others to bring their cases before the Government agencies until after an order has already been issued, and then they come to Washington and try to show that the order has resulted in hardship cases in order to obtain relief.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Maybe a provision along the line suggested by the Senator should have been in the bill. But the Senate conferees did not yield on any language that was in the bill when it was passed by the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Much of this discussion relates to something the President of the United States asked for. After hearings the committee wrote them in the bill. As chairman of the committee, I am hopeful that some of the powers granted by the bill will never be used. I am hopeful that we may do so well in the future, in spite of the trouble we are having now, that it may not be necessary for the President to use some of the authority the bill would give him. For that reason we wrote in the bill the selective controls.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate that observation. We must assume, however, when we vote for the conference report that if these powers are granted, even on a discretionary basis, they will be used, if it is necessary to use them. That is why I am so anxious to get a clear interpretation.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am sure my good friend from Nebraska agrees with me that the Congress of the United States, by joint resolution, can repeal any section it wants to repeal at any time it wishes to do so. In any event the authority expires on June 30, next.

Mr. WHERRY. I think that is one of the finest things the conferees did.

Now that the Senator has brought up this matter, I should like to ask a question about it: Does not the conference report provide that the provisions relative to price controls and stabilization shall apply for 1 year——

Mr. MAYBANK. No; for 10 months.

Mr. WHERRY. I mean for what is left of this year, and the first half of next year. Does not the conference report also provide that the provisions in reference to allocations, as those provisions are to be found in titles I, II, and III——

Mr. MAYBANK. And in title VII; and they are to continue in effect until 1952.

Mr. WHERRY. I see.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is right.

Mr. WHERRY. On that point I think the conferees have done a good job.

There is another question I should like to ask, in regard to a matter as to which I think it is vital that the meaning be made clear if we are to understand the interpretation by the conferees of the conference report.

On page 8 there is new language, I believe, if I am correct, which reads as follows:

> The President, in establishing and adjusting ceilings with respect to materials and services, and in stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, and other compensation, shall make such adjustments as he deems necessary to prevent or correct hardships or inequities.

I think the intention in that wording is good, namely, that if there are hardship cases because of the imposition of ceilings, an opportunity should be afforded to obtain relief in such hardship cases.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is House language.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to ask this question: Does that provision nullify, or is there an intention on the part of the conferees to permit the nullification of, the mandatory features of any of the preceding paragraphs in respect to selective controls?

Mr. MAYBANK. I answer directly by saying, "No"; and I also answer that it was the House language.

Mr. WHERRY. But the intention there was——

Mr. MAYBANK. It absolutely is not intended to nulllify them one iota.

Mr. WHERRY. That provision is to apply only in hardship cases which are exceptional. Is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is right.

Mr. WHERRY. That provision will not in any way permit an interpretation which would open the matter wide, so that the President could do whatever he deemed necessary to be done?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I became so concerned about the provision of the original bill that a wage increase must not be permitted to break through the ceiling and work an undue burden upon the seller that I got the Senate committee to adopt the language appearing on page 32 of the committee report, namely, that in applying that provision the President must not permit a wage increase which would not leave to the producer a reasonable profit.

In the conference the conferees first tentatively agreed to write that language into the report, but then they said,

"There will be interminable fights over what is and what is not a reasonable profit, and the better language would be 'hardships and inequities'."

That is the explanation of those words.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I think that explanation will be very helpful in connection with understanding the legislative history of this bill.

I should like to ask another question of the distinguished chairman of the committee, who was interested in the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment. The Barkley-Bates amendment, as modified by myself, is now out of the conference report, is it not?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Is there anything in the conference report which will accomplish what was intended to be accomplished by that amendment?

Mr. MAYBANK. There is a provision that, if necessary, there may be imposed certain controls which will apply to everyone. For instance, there was a textile amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. And there was a milk amendment, was there not?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The conferees adopted the House language on the so-called milk amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. But the Senator from Nebraska asked me about a Senate amendment——

Mr. WHERRY. I have yielded to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not going to permit two Senators to talk at the same time any longer, because we have only one Official Reporter present. The Chair will have to ask Senators to restrain their impatience, so that only one Senator will speak at a time.

The Senator from Nebraska has the floor, and he has yielded to the Senator from South Carolina. The Chair recognizes the Senator from South Carolina for that purpose.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to say to my distinguished friend, the Senator from Virginia, who has had much to do with working out and reconciling this extremely difficult measure, that I understood the Senator from Nebraska to ask me about the Senate version——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to repeat the question, for it is only a short one. I wish to say again that I am not attempting to delay action on the conference report for even a moment, but I should like to get the answer to my question into the RECORD: The so-called Barkley-Bates amendment of the former act, as modified by me, was in the bill as it was passed by the Senate, but that provision has been deleted from the conference report.

Is there anything in the conference report which will accomplish what was intended to be accomplished by the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment, as modified by the junior Senator from Nebraska? I have not had time to go through all the conference report carefully, and I do not believe other Members of the Senate have had an opportunity to do so, either.

I should like to know whether there is a corresponding provision of the conference report or whether there is agreement in regard to language which will produce the same result, and whether that is why the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment, was omitted from the conference report.

After all, that amendment was in effect under the old Stabilization Act; and it was in the bill as the Senate passed it, although it was modified by me at that time. To my mind, that provision is the only way in the world by which we can prevent a black market in the case of meat.

If there is a similar provision in the conference report, all right; but when that provision of the Senate bill was deleted in conference, the conferees threw out the one thing which will prevent a black market on meat in the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia knows a great deal more about meat than I do. I believe he will agree with me that in the conference we fought long and hard for the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment, as amended by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Senator from Virginia believed that the section on page 8 covered that matter. I do not know whether he believes it fully covers the matter or not; but we included this provision:

Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing.

Mr. WHERRY. That provision was in the old act, and its inclusion in the conference report is simply a renewal of the old language. However, during all the long period when the previous act was in effect, that provision did not accomplish the purpose intended; and it will not accomplish the purpose now.

Mr. President, I am not complaining, of course——

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, may I explain the position taken by the House conferees?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In the conference, the Senate conferees insisted on the amendment, and finally put it in the so-called basket. The conferees on the part of the House would not agree to include that provision; and they put it off and put it off. Finally, they said, "If you permit a separate profit price on cattle, hogs, sheep, and other livestock, but not a price that will result in a fair return to the big packers who slaughter the animals, you will penalize the consumer by means of higher prices on each of those commodities, prices higher than the prices would have been under the provisions of the old OPA Act or under the provisions of this bill as the House has passed it."

They also said, "This amendment did not go into effect until 1946, when we were just about to throw out all controls."

Mr. WHERRY. Is there anything in the conference report which will take the place of the Barkley-Bates-Wherry amendment?

Mr. ROBERTSON. There is not.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Except what the Senator from South Carolina refers to, namely, the provision that the President must try to give reasonable consideration to hardship cases.

Mr. THYE and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota, and then I shall yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I am confident that neither the minority leader nor any other Member is selfishly speaking for the meat producer or the meat processor or the meat packer. The only reason why there should be such a provision and why a legitimate and fair profit should be permitted to the processor and packer is to keep in business the slaughterer in the legitimate slaughterhouses or slaughter centers or packing centers, because if that is not done, all the byproducts from the animal carcasses will be lost.

As a matter of fact, during World War II in the United States we were within a few days or a few hours of exhausting the supply of insulin, which is essential in order to keep alive persons who require insulin injections. If the supply of insulin had been exhausted, the situation would indeed have been serious.

It is for that reason only that we have concerned ourselves with an attempt to write into the control bill a provision which will keep the slaughter of livestock in legitimate, established slaughterhouses, rather than in some back woods or in some old deserted barn or shed. We know how serious the situation was only a few years ago, when controls and regulations and price ceilings were established on meats. It drove the cattle out of the slaughtering centers into the back woods to be slaughtered in old, abandoned barns, and so forth.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Minnesota for his observation. It describes exactly the experience which was had at that time. The Senator has described the experiences which we shall again pass through, in view of the fact that this amendment is omitted from the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHERRY. When I complete this observation, I shall be glad to yield. The Senator from Virginia has answered my question. The Barkley-Bates amendment is out of the bill. All that the Wherry amendment to it proposed was to extend its application to each segment of the meat processing industry. It sought merely to clarify the meaning of the Barkley-Bates amendment; that was all.

This is exactly what will happen: If the retail price is set at the consumer level, there will then be dislocations going clear back to the producer. When the price is set at that level, it will be found that the large packing plants, which the Senator has been saying such a provision would protect, will be the ones who will get the meat. That is what will happen. They will distribute it through their subsidiaries. Immediately the independent sources of supply will pass out of the picture.

Where will the meat be obtained? The large packing plants will get it where they got it the last time, namely, on the range. They will buy the cattle in the sand hills. It will be necessary to do what was done the last time, when there sprang up 26,000 little packing plants, such as those in the barnyards, mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. The cattle will be killed there. It will be necessary to pay a black-market price in order for the packers to obtain meat, and a black-market price will be necessary in order to sell it. There will be a loss of the hides and the offal, and the innards, as a result. That was the experience the last time. The amendment attempted to provide a remedy for that condition, and it would have worked well. It is now omitted from the bill and all we have is the mere intention, a declaration that there must be a fair and full price for agricultural products. That is as good as nothing.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, the Senator has overlooked several factors which played an important part in what happened previously. One was that OPA, under the domination of a vice president of Armour & Co., required all the small-town slaughterhouses to have a Federal inspector. There were not enough Federal inspectors, and the establishments were closed up. That was one thing which started the farm slaughtering, which was illegal. Another thing was the unrealistic price of grain, which made it unprofitable to sell the grain with which to feed the cattle so that they could put on an extra 300 or 400 pounds. The cattle went to the market light. The supply of meat was drastically reduced, and an acute shortage of meat resulted. But that was the fault of OPA in putting on the wrong prices.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want to take up too much time of the Senate.

Mr. THYE. I assure the Senator it will not be an argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. THYE. The able Senator from Virginia stated very clearly why it is necessary to have a hearing in order to determine what the price shall be before it is fixed by regulation. The Senator stated that when there is a dislocation, a disjointure, or an unlevel status, then there is brought into existence exactly the condition to which he referred. For that reason, it is very important that when a regulation is being considered, the industries and the individuals affected be consulted. They should be consulted before the regulation is promulgated. Only in that manner can the glaring examples of injustice and the violations which occurred under price regulation during World War II be avoided.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator is exactly right.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Minnestota for his observation. While it is true that there might have been a certain amount of progress made under OPA Administrator Bowles, and others, there are those who say the directives were made selfishly, but I am not going to stand on the floor to say that. There will be trouble in the future in connection with the administration of the act, and, while what has been indicated in the observations made by the Senator, may be one of the reasons which contributed in a small degree to the difficulty, yet I speak as one who comes from the section of the country where meat is produced. What I am saying about meat can also be said about cotton.

Mr. MAYBANK. But we did not say anything about cotton.

Mr. WHERRY. What I am saying about meat may also be said about oil, or eggs. It is rather odd that the milk amendment is retained. Why? I have no objection to it. I appreciate its being retained, because milk is produced in my State. But the same thing can be said about beef that is said about milk. If we undertake to regulate beef, we have got to regulate pork, lamb, poultry, and eggs, and all the grains. What is the use of regulating meat if we do not regulate corn? Corn makes beef. The best beef there is comes from corn-fed cattle. If we regulate corn, we must regulate wheat; otherwise there will be a dislocation in grains. If we regulate corn and wheat, we have got to regulate all grains. That is why the Bricker-Wherry amendment should have been retained in the bill. It is simply impossible to make a selective control work, unless we go entirely across the board with all controls. It is impossible to make any selective control bill work because it is impossible to know where to begin or where to stop. I say that with all due respect to what was done by the conferees. I understand they were deadlocked.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. They did their level best to retain the Bricker-Wherry amendment. I appreciate that fact. We can see the imperfections. There is no man living who is smart enough to administer a program of selective controls, because when he starts with one, unless the controls go entirely across the board, a dislocation results all the way up and down the line.

Mr. President, I realize that I shall have to take this bill, whether I like it or not. Why? Because of the first three titles of the bill. I believe that in time of war the President certainly should have the power to allocate. In the report it is stated that the controls are necessary on behalf of the military. Certainly they are. In that field no one is more anxious to allocate than I. But, if things are in that shape, what we should have done with our domestic economy is to have gone clear across the board. We should have done a real job of price control, in an effort to stop inflation. That should have been the purpose of the Congress. We should have so provided, for as long as we had to have controls, and they should be taken off as soon as possible in peacetime, and the free economy allowed to function.

Mr. President, I shall support the conference report because of the first three titles, but I say now that it is going to be very difficult to establish price ceilings and to control wages on a selective basis. Whoever operates the program, whether the President or someone appointed by him, will have a very difficult time in attempting to administer the law equitably. I can see, now, segments of the economy coming forward, as they did before the Small Business Committee, saying, "Our business is gone. We can get no gasoline. We can get no meat. What are you going to do for us?" A man would say, "I have got to lock my door, but right across the road is a great industry which, through its subsidiaries, takes the entire supply, which they can deliver right down to the consumer level." They are going to get it, and the small independent operator is going to be out of the picture. That is exactly what is going to happen.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask one more question, and then I shall be through. I shall yield now, if the Senator wants me to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator from Alabama fought for the meat amendment, as he did for other things, but he said, "I am not going to ask consideration for cotton if we cannot get it for Senator WHERRY's meat."

Mr. WHERRY. I was not speaking only for meat. I think my argument can be applied to cotton or to any other basic commodity, and the Senator knows that to be so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am learning a great deal about this report as I go along. I hate to take the time of the Senate, but I certainly want to discuss the last point in which I am interested. I was very much interested in the small-business man——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was greatly impressed with the distinguished Senator's interest in small business and with that of the junior Senator from Alabama. I shall ask him to explain it fully, because I know the two Senators feel alike on the subject.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to address my question not only to the Senator from South Carolina, but to the Senator from Alabama. The conferees have changed the language of the Wherry-Sparkman amendment as it was adopted by the Senate, which was section 701 (c) of the bill as it passed the Senate. Under that amendment the President, after finding that the allocation would result in a significant dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, could allocate in "such a manner as to make available, so far as practicable, to business, and various segments thereof in the normal channel of distribution of such material a fair share of the available civilian supply."

Will the distinguished Senator from Alabama be good enough to answer this question? Does the new language in the conference report require the President, whenever he allocates under this section, to make available to individual businesses, in the normal channel of distribution, a fair share of the available civilian supply?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I would say that the answer to that question would be "yes," with the qualifying words "so far as practicable." Let me say a word in explanation of the amendment being modified as it was. The Senator from Nebraska knows that I collaborated with him in the preparation of the amendment to which the Senate agreed. The House bill contained no similar language whatsoever. The House conferees insisted that the entire provision be stricken out. The Senate conferees stood fast in favor of the amendment which had been written into the bill. The House conferees insisted that it would tie the hands of the President and would be very difficult to administer. However, they finally agreed to yield to the Senate, provided we would adopt language which does give it more flexibility than does the language which the Senator from Nebraska and I agreed to in the amendment we proposed on the floor. I will admit that there is not as high a degree of protection to small business in the language finally adopted as there was in the amendment to which the Senate agreed, but I think this is the best we can possibly get.

There are two things that it really changes. One is by requiring the President to give due regard for new businesses that may be established. The Senator knows that we discussed that when the amendment was pending. The second is that instead of saying he must give to each individual business the same proportion it had previously, it says he must channel to businesses in the normal course of distribution, insofar as practicable, a fair share based upon a representative period prior to June 24, 1950.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I said a moment ago that I conceded that it does not give as complete protection as the amendment to which the Senate agreed, but it certainly shows the intention of Congress.

I wish to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that there is created a watchdog committee which will be ever on the alert, and I think we can count on substantial help being given to small business under the amendment as finally agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I can give the Senator a little more background.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to make an observation, first, and then if the Senator has any further background, I shall be glad to hear it.

I appreciate the explanation of the Senator from Alabama. It was very clear. The point at issue is whether we shall give each individual business the protection it needs. That is the whole root of the matter. I appreciate the fact that the conference committee tried to give a fair share to a certain segment of the industry. The principal purpose of the Wherry-Sparkman amendment was to assure that the independent nonintegrated user of a material would not be cut off during an allocation period by his integrated supplier who is also his competitor. That is very applicable to the distribution of oil. The little independents fade out of the picture because their source of supply is cut off. The big sources of supply can allocate to the wholesaler or to their subsidiaries what they are entitled to, down to the man who puts the oil into his automobile. But it is difficult to assure the nonintegrated independent any opportunity of a source of supply. That was the trouble previously.

Does the Senator from Alabama agree with me about that?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No, I do not. Certainly it is not the intent of the conferees to say that the wholesaler shall have the right to ignore the little fellow at a lower level. It is our intention that the allocation shall follow through, and even though we do not specify each individual business, we certainly contemplate that insofar as practicable a fair allocation shall be made to each individual.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the intent, and I know that the distinguished Senator from Alabama was attempting to do all he could. But intent is one thing, and writing it into the law is another thing. I cannot see why the House, if it is interested in small business, would not accept the Wherry-Sparkman amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. In a moment I shall be glad to yield. I should like to finish these observations.

We are going to find, right down to the retail level, that if we allocate on a volume basis to the retailers of the Nation the source of supply will be cut off unless the independent nonintegrated man is given the supply he has had during the base period. Unless that is done, he will be cut off to a great extent.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, there is a conference committee which is supposed to meet at 3 o'clock on a matter of vital importance to every depositor in every bank and building and loan organization in the country——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to suggest that the distinguished members of the conference are now awaiting that meeting.

Mr. BRICKER. Unless we can have the conference and agree upon the report there will be no protection given to depositors in banks and building and loan associations. The House will recess this afternoon and will not be back until the 14th of September. I doubt if we shall be able to get the conference report through then unless a majority returns. I am very anxious that the committee give the subject consideration.

I have prepared a statement on the conference report on the defense production bill which I intended to present to the Senate. I wanted to present clearly the fact that if the conference committee had followed the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio a month ago we would have had the law by this time. There is no use putting into the bill price or wage controls which should have been a matter subject to hearing and a careful consideration by committees of the House and Senate and not presenting to the Congress a constructive bill. As a result of the action of the majority we are now 5 weeks late in giving power to the President which everyone agrees he should have in order to conduct even the Korean affair. The international situation is becoming more difficult day by day. For that reason I signed the report, and I shall vote for it on the floor of the Senate. There are many things in it with which I do not agree. It is a power bill all the way through; it is a complete regimentation bill, and I do not believe it should be passed at this time without testimony and without consideration, but, nevertheless, the inducement to pass this bill giving the President of the United States the power to allocate, the power to give priorities, and the power to compel contracts, is so great that it is a necessary thing at this hour.

Therefore, any delay in the matter would possibly hold it up longer, prevent the conference I mentioned, and from giving adequate consideration to another bill which is of great interest. Therefore, I ask that what I had intended to present on the floor of the Senate today be printed in the body of the Record at this point, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, Mr. BRICKER's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BRICKER

On July 19, 1950, President Truman requested from the Congress power to allocate scarce materials, requisition materials and facilities, expand the production and supply of critical defense items, and control credit. There was never any doubt that these powers were urgently needed to meet the emergency in Korea. Why has action on these important controls required 6 weeks? Both the Senate and House committees completed action on the controls requested by the President a month ago, but Congress has devoted a full month to price and wage-control legislation—power which the President did not ask for in his message to Congress. As a result, we are 1 month late with respect to the program of economic mobilization which the President considered essential to successful prosecution of the Korean war.

Mr. President, I hope that the powers conferred by this bill do not come too late. Throughout the past 6 weeks, I have urged that we give the President the economic controls he requested at once, and that action on price and wage controls be considered as separate legislation. A majority of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee did not agree. As a result, action on vital economic controls has been seriously delayed. In addition, the price and wage-control sections of the bill show the result of hasty action without benefit of hearings on the subject.

At this time, Mr. President, I wish to discuss briefly some of the important issues as resolved in conference, and certain provisions about which there has been some misunderstanding.

By far the most important issue faced by the conferees was that of selective versus over-all price and wage controls. By a vote of 50–36 a majority of the Senate eliminated selective price and wage controls from the bill. What is not so well known is that a majority of the House also voted against authority to control prices and wages on a piecemeal basis.

The question of selective versus over-all controls was presented to the House in the Kunkel amendment. This amendment, like my amendment accepted by the Senate, eliminated section 402 (b) from the original bill expressly authorizing selectivity. In the debate on the Kunkel amendment, Congressman KUNKEL said:

"I am offering this amendment which in substance cuts out the intermediate step of selective price controls."

The Kunkel amendment was supported by Congressman COLE of Kansas who said:

"I am in accord with the gentleman that selective price controls will not work and that once the Administrator attempts to place controls on a given commodity he thus begins to throw out of gear the economic picture of the country."

In eliminating selective price and wage controls a majority of both the House and the Senate recognized that they would be most unfair to thousands of wage earners in the controlled industries. For example, Congressman KUNKEL said:

"When you put a ceiling on just one particular commodity and one particular wage, then in my judgment that is the most unfair thing you can do to the average working man in this country. It is complete discrimination between workers and business people, depending on their line of activity, at the whim of the President."

There was considerable opposition to the move to eliminate selective price and wage controls in the House as well as in the Senate. Congressman PATMAN said that the Kunkel amendment would eliminate the second step in the bill which he described as No. 2, selective controls which will permit the President to deal with certain items and certain commodities, and along with it wages as well as prices.

It was recognized in the House as well as in the Senate that the American economy is so interdependent that selective price and wage controls simply will not work. In the debate on the Kunkel amendment in the House, Congressman POAGE said:

"Are we to say that we will put a ceiling price on brick and none on cement? Do we not know that brick would go off the market and cement blocks would go up? * * * We are not going to stop inflation by pushing some prices down and letting others go uncontrolled. You must control all prices if you are to keep goods on the market at fair prices."

Congressman KEAN supported the Kunkel amendment as a result of our experience under selective controls during the last war. He pointed out:

Selective controls proved to be a failure, and in October 1942 the President recommended and the Congress passed a bill providing for over-all controls thereafter. The people of the United States and the Government during the war years paid billions more for what they needed than they should have.

"Selective controls have failed in past history; they will fail now. So I support the Kunkel amendment."

The Kunkel amendment was accepted by the House by a vote of 94 to 70 on a division and by a teller vote of 118 to 96. In view of this clear-cut expression of opinion in both Houses against selective controls many people no doubt wonder how the conference report could now include selective controls. The answer is that the Kunkel amendment was not drafted so as to accomplish its intended purpose. The House conferees, as was their right, insisted upon the letter of the House bill, and the Senate was forced to recede.

As a result, the administration has won its battle for selective price and wage controls. In my opinion, however, this will prove to be a hollow victory, and one, which from the political standpoint, cannot help but embarrass the President. There will be numerous pressure groups which will complain in the next 2 months that thousands of prices are too high. The President will be subjected to tremendous pressure to control particular commodities, the price of which, many people, rightly or wrongly, feel to be excessive. The President will be forced to initiate a piecemeal system of controls by reason of political pressure which can be exerted by certain groups. As a result, materials and labor will tend to flow from the controlled industry to the uncontrolled segment of the economy, thereby prejudicing the defense effort if the controlled industry is a vital one. Some employers and employees will find their incomes limited at a time when all other prices and wages are free to rise. Once the President embarks on selective price and wage controls, general price and wage controls will become inevitable.

The idea of trying selective price and wage controls before resorting to general controls is inconsistent with the so-called Baruch plan. Mr. Baruch's thesis, confirmed by the experience in two wars, is that any attempt to control a few prices or wages is futile. The piecemeal control provisions authorized by the conferees invite the President to initiate an unworkable program which cannot fail to result in creating distortion and chaos in the economy.

A number of people described the Bricker amendment eliminating selective price and wage controls as a political maneuver. In my opinion, Mr. President, the authority to impose price and wage controls on a piecemeal basis is a political booby trap for the President. It is not unreasonable to expect that candidates for public office will view with alarm the high price of meat, for example, and demand that the President impose price ceilings on meat and wage ceilings on packing-house employees. The administration will be helpless in the face of such demands. A majority of those voting in both the House and Senate tried to protect the President from politically inspired demands for price and wage controls on particular commodities and wages, and at the same time guard against the premature application of general, over-all controls.

It is unfortunate Mr. President, that the Senate conferees were unable to retain the Johnson amendment placing all priorities and allocation powers in the Secretary of Commerce. As a result, there is a real danger of a bureaucratic fight for the right to allocate particular commodities. For example, the right to allocate tin might be claimed by the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. The possibility of duplicating authority and confusion constitutes a threat to the defense effort. If it becomes necessary at some future time to create a new agency to administer priorities and allocations powers, it will be difficult to collect these powers from a large number of the existing departments and agencies. I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the President will concentrate most of this authority in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce, and that Chairman Symington will be able to minimize the potential and probable jurisdictional conflicts.

Although the Senate conferees were unable to insure unified direction and control of priorities and allocations powers, they were successful in securing unified direction and control of general price, wage, and consumer rationing authority. Section 403 provides:

"At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of title I of this act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department."

Section 403, for example, will prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from administering a consumer rationing program, the Secretary of Labor from controlling wages generally, and the Secretary of Commerce from controlling prices generally. If it becomes necessary to impose general price and wage controls, we will not have another Office of Price Administration with no authority over wages. One agency will be charged with controlling inflation, and that agency will have full power over prices, wages, and rationing at the consumer level. Moreover, that power cannot be delegated. In my opinion, the provision for a single independent agency represents a great improvement over the haphazard organizational structure under which we operated during the last war.

Any legislation which permits regimentation of the whole economy cannot help but involve the sacrifice of some individual liberties. In my opinion, the economic controls legislation of the last war sacrificed many rights of the individual unnecessarily. The outstanding example of unnecessary encroachment on individual liberty was the provision in the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 which compelled the district courts to send a man to jail even though the court felt that the regulation or order which he violated was not in accordance with law, or was arbitrary or capricious. Although the Supreme Court held such a provision constitutional, the late Mr. Justice Rutledge said in dissent:

"Once it is held that Congress can require the courts criminally to enforce unconstitutional laws or statutes, including regulations, or to do so without regard for their validity, the way will have been found to circumvent the supreme law and, what is more, to make the courts parties to doing so." Yakus v. United States, (321 U. S. 414, 468).

To prevent the loss of a man's freedom as a result of violating an invalid regulation, I offered an amendment to permit the local courts to pass on the validity of price regulations in criminal and civil actions, but granting to the Emergency Court of Appeals the exclusive right to enjoin the enforcement of regulations claimed to be invalid. Although my amendment was accepted by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, the House bill followed the 1942 price-control law.

The House conferees insisted on the provision in the House bill. However, the conference was able to work out a compromise giving defendants the right to contest the validity of the regulations which they are charged with violating. Unfortunately, under the terms of the compromise, defendants will have to go from the trial court to the Emergency Court of Appeals in order to raise the defense that a particular regulation or order is invalid.

The conference accepted an amendment of mine to the Senate bill forbidding the issuance of highest price line limitation orders. The provision is now section 402 (i), which provides:

"No rule, regulation, or order issued under this title shall require any seller of materials at retail to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time."

Although this provision is not one of major importance, I wish to correct the misconception of many people that this is a "sport-shirt amendment." In the last war, many manufacturers stopped making lower-price shirts and produced only fancy sport shorts on which a higher-price ceiling was applicable. The "highest-price line" provision has nothing to do with that situation. It applies only to retailers.

The highest price line limitation provision is designed to help the low-income consumer. During the last war, some low-overhead retail stores were prevented by OPA regulations from selling dresses, for example, in excess of $12 if that was their highest price dress on the date of the freeze. Such stores would have been able to sell dresses for $15, but were unable to do so even though the same dress could and did sell for $25 at some more exclusive, higher-overhead shop.

Title V dealing with the settlement of labor disputes was eliminated by the House, but a majority of the Senate voted for that title. Many Members of the House felt that the language of title V was so broad that it permitted compulsory arbitration, or even conscription of striking workers. Many of the Senators who voted for title V did so in the belief that only voluntary action was authorized. Title V, as reported by the conference committee, should meet with the approval of the overwhelming majority of the Members of both Houses.

In its original form, title V authorized the President, "after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting the national defense. * * *" The words "take such action as he deems appropriate" did not exclude the possibility of compulsion in the settlement of labor disputes. This broad language was eliminated from title V by the conferees.

In its present form, title V authorizes only voluntary action either through the use of existing mediation and conciliation facilities or as a result of Government-industry-labor conferences. Such voluntary action must be consistent with price and wage stabilization policies, the Taft-Hartley Act, and Federal labor standards statutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. I presume that what the Senator has said referred to the original Bricker amendment insofar as jurisdiction was concerned.

Mr. BRICKER. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to say that we on this side of the aisle had agreed to stay with the Senator as long as we could, and that we finally worked out something that we could put in the conference report.

Mr. BRICKER. That is what I wanted to discuss. I intended to discuss the situation under which an individual citizen charged criminally or civilly by his Government does not have the right to avail himself of a defense in his local court.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Ohio, and the Senate conferees stuck together as long as they could.

Mr. BRICKER. I agree entirely that the Senate conferees stuck together, and I thank the Senator. Even though the individual rights of a citizen are involved, as I indicated, I do not desire to hold up further giving the President power which is essential for the conduct of the war, and to put us on a war economy.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Ohio will agree that I felt the same way about it.

Mr. BRICKER. That is true.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show that I deeply appreciate the work of the minority members of the conference committee. I consulted with them. They worked long hours. Certainly they have acquired a thorough knowledge of what transpired. I only regret that some of the provisions they wanted to keep in the bill were taken out. I certainly thank the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] who worked very hard on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is asked to recognize the Senator from Wyoming to bring up a privileged matter.

Mr. CAPEHART. What other privileged matter, Mr. President? We are considering a privileged matter now.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Nebraska said. Certainly as chaiman of the committee I appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], as well as the work of the Senators on this side of the aisle who are members of the conference committee.

Last evening some question was raised with respect to the termination date. Later on I shall offer for the record a statement in which, among other things, I set forth my understanding of the effect of the termination provisions. There can be no question about the termination date, so far as contract dates are concerned. I ask that the memorandum be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to be kind enough to give his attention to title V of the conference report.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Section 502 contains certain language which I should like to have interpreted by the Senator from South Carolina, as a member of the Senate conferees and as chairman of the committee. The language to which I have reference is:

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest.

Then comes this language, to which I request particular attention of the Senator from South Carolina:

To this end, the President is authorized (1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent government and the public, and (2) subject to the provisions of section 503, to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. The President may designate such persons or agencies as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

I ask the Senator by whom it is contemplated that the agreement mentioned in the second portion of the second sentence is to be made. In other words, the President is authorized to initiate these conferences consisting of, first, management; second, labor; and third, such persons as the President may designate to represent government and the public. The sentence then proceeds:

And (2) subject to the provisions of section 503, to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

The agreement of whom is required?

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to say to the distinguished Senator from Missouri that we labored hard and long on this bill. Finally, after it came to the Senate floor 2 weeks ago the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] explained the purport of title V. We agreed that we should do something similar to what was done during the last war with respect to setting up a war labor board. We felt some agency should be established through which perhaps voluntary no-strike pledges could be proposed to management and labor. Since the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] is familiar with this matter, I should like to have him answer the question if the Senator from Missouri does not object. Otherwise I shall be glad to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from New York is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. IVES. I shall make direct answer to the question posed by the distinguished Senator from Missouri by making the statement that it would have to be agreed to by the conferees, who consist of all the segments indicated in the previous reference under subdivision (1). In other words, labor, management, and the public. If any group were to hold out, there would be no agreement.

Mr. DONNELL. I think I understood the answer of the Senator from New York, but I want to be perfectly sure. The conference is to consist of the three segments: (1) management, (2) labor, (3) such persons as the President may designate to represent Government and the public. Suppose management and labor agreed, but the persons selected by the President to represent the Government and the public do not agree, is there agreement under those circumstances within the contemplation of that section?

Mr. IVES. No, not in the construction that I place on the section.

Mr. DONNELL. Am I correct in understanding that in order that the President may be authorized to take the action mentioned in the second sentence of section 502 there must have been agreement by each and all of the three segments indicated, namely, management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent the Government and the public?

Mr. IVES. I believe that interpretation is the correct interpretation.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the distinguished chairman the same question?

Mr. IVES. May I make a short statement while I am on the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. IVES. I shall take very little time, because I realize the need for speed. However, insofar as title V is concerned, I personally believe that it is an improvement over the original title V passed by the Senate. It is not exactly as it should be. There are defects in it. But certainly all the doubtful matter that was in the original title V has been cleared up. Mr. President, I believe it is workable and in line with the intent of the Congress.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I have the floor. May I ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, before we get too far away from the question I asked, whether he concurs in the answer made by the distinguished Senator from New York to my question, which I understand to be as follows: In order that the President may be authorized to take the action mentioned in the second sentence of section 502 there must have been agreement by each and all of the three segments participating in the conference, namely, management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent Government and the public. Does the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator from New York has stated.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from South Carolina agrees with the statement I have made as to the construction of what the Senator from New York has stated? Am I correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. It was the desire of the Senator from New York and the Senator from South Carolina to have industrial peace in time of war. We thought that the programs which had been reasonably successful during the last war should be instituted again, and it is our hope that the President, perhaps, would take steps toward that end. The President would be able to appoint suitable persons and consult with others, so as to bring about a condition of industry-labor peace.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am not at all questioning the desire to secure industrial peace.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator from New York has said.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well. Then I understand that in order that the President may have the authority to take the action stated in the second sentence of section 502, there must have been agreement by each and all of three elements, namely, management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent the Government and the public. Am I correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. The distinguished Senator from Missouri is absolutely correct.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared regarding the conference report be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I am very pleased to report to the Senate that your Committee on Banking and Currency and the House Committee on Banking and Currency, having met in free conference, have reconciled their differences and have agreed on a bill which I earnestly hope the Senate will approve.

Your committee has worked without interruption every day, morning, afternoon and on many evenings, since the bill was introduced on July 19. The task of your committee was a difficult one, indeed, since the subject matter was so complex and the interests involved were so tremendous and the time to act so limited. But, Mr. President, no chairman ever received more cooperation from his committee members than did I. There were differences and strong ones, but in the interests of all Americans we settled them in a way I trust you will agree was constructive.

TITLE I

In title I, priorities and allocations, there were two important differences between the House and the Senate conferees—the antihoarding provision and the location of administrative responsibility.

The House receded to the Senate's antihoarding provision with two minor clarifying amendments.

The Senate after prolonged discussion finally receded to the House in authorizing the President to delegate the power to assign priorities and allocate materials and facilities to any officer or agency of the Government rather than to the Secretary of Commerce as provided for in the Senate bill. The House insisted that it would be inefficient and unwise to require an agency unfamiliar and perhaps not equipped to deal with the problem of a particular industry, say agriculture or the petroleum industry or communications to administer the functions and allocations in connection with or for that particular industry. The conferees assume, however, that the President so far as practicable will delegate the authority with respect to any one basic commodity to a single agency of Government. The conferees further assume, as was indicated during the public hearings, that the major responsibility will, unless at some later date the President sets up a new agency for the administration of this program, be placed under the Secretary of Commerce.

The conferees further assume that in delegating his authority under the bill the President will designate an existing agency, or establish a new agency to coordinate the activities of all Federal agencies under the bill.

TITLE II

On the title concerning authority to requisition the House receded to the Senate in permitting the owner of any property requisitioned to bring suit, regardless of whether the amount exceeded $10,000, in any district court, rather than as provided in the House bill to permit recovery for sums exceeding $10,000 in the Court of Claims.

The differences between the House and Senate version on the return of requisitioned property to the original owner were settled by the House accepting the Senate version with respect to the return of real property and the Senate receding to the House provision on the return of personal property.

TITLE III

In this title providing for the expansion of productive capacity and supply the House agreed to the Senate provision with respect to the inclusion of "services" along with "production and deliveries." Likewise the House agreed with the Senate provision making eligible for loans and guarantees nonprofit research corporations.

The Senate receded to the House in authorizing the President to designate, rather than have the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System designate, as provided in the Senate bill any Federal Reserve bank to act on behalf of any guaranteeing agency as fiscal agent, and likewise placed the responsibility for supervision and issuance of regulations under section 301 in the President rather than in the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. The conferees assume that the President will, as he did in the last war, make the fullest use of the facilities of the Federal Reserve Board to the extent he deems necessary.

The House also receded to the Senate in accepting the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] as amended by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] providing for the purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, for Government use or for resale; and for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals. A modifying amendment providing against the sale of any agricultural commodities purchased under this section at less than the current market price or the minimum price established by the Commodity Credit Corporation was agreed upon.

The House receded to the Senate provision (sec. 303 (b)) authorizing the purchases and commitments to purchase and sell to be made without regard to limitations of existing law and on terms and conditions which the President deems necessary. Purchase at above the prevailing market prices or when a loss is anticipated shall only be made where it is determined that the supply could not be increased at the lower price or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability of overseas supplies.

For the administration of the loan and purchase program the House provided, in addition to the use of departments, agencies, officials, or corporations, for the establishment of new corporations. The Senate bill provided for the establishment of new agencies but not new corporations. The House bill authorized a revolving fund of $2,000,000,000 to be borrowed from the Treasury of the United States while the Senate authorized a fund of $300,000,000 to be borrowed from the Treasury pending the appropriation of such sums as are requested to carry out the loan and purchase programs. The House receded to the Senate with an amendment in the form of a substitute. It provides for a revolving fund of $600,000,000 to be borrowed from the United States Treasury and an additional authorization for an appropriation of $1,400,000,000.

The Senate receded to the House on the Metals and Minerals subtitle, the so-called Millikin amendment, because the House insisted it could not agree to such a provision because an identical measure had been rejected by the House. The Senate conferees also were aware that the purpose and objective of this subtitle were well provided for in section 303 (a).

The House accepted the Senate provision (the Johnson amendment) authorizing the installation of additional equipment, facilities, processes or improvements to plants, factories and facilities owned by the United States Government with an amendment providing for the installation of Government-owned equipment in plants, factories or facilities owned by private persons. The conferees wish to make it perfectly clear that the use of the word "encouragement" is not intended to interfere with or to limit the Bureau of Mines or any Government agency in their regular operations and programs.

The price and wage stabilization title which your committee added to the administration's requested production control bill was the title which created the most problems and caused the greatest difficulties for all the conferees.

The Senate bill, in addition to voluntary action for the control of prices and wages, authorized the President to impose price ceilings and wage stabilization generally, and specifically prohibited selective price or wage control. The House provided for selective control as well as general price and wage control, but the latter were only required to be instituted when ceilings had been established on materials or services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and substantially affecting the cost of living.

A substitute amendment was finally agreed upon by the conferees providing for selective control under certain conditions and providing for the stabilization of wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service on which a ceiling was imposed. It provided, as the House bill did, for the imposition of price ceilings and wage stabilization generally, whenever ceilings had been established on materials comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living. Provision was made for adjusting ceilings and wages when the President deems it necessary to prevent hardships and inequities, and the President is authorized and required to give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of the act. The President in adjusting price ceilings would consider such things as profits in the particular industry and related industries; and in adjusting wages would likewise consider wages in the same industries and similar occupations in related industries.

The Senate receded on the amendment providing that no ceiling could be established or maintained which is designed to allow any seller a margin of profit greater than his normal margin when, after careful examination, all the conferees agreed that such a standard would be impossible to determine for every one of possibly thousands and thousands of sellers.

The House receded with an amendment to the so-called hardship amendment. It is to protect those sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect for future deliveries and who would suffer a real hardship or inequity as a result of the issuance of price regulations. I wish to emphasize that this provision is not intended, and under proper administration will not be used, for those who wish to exempt themselves from the price ceilings, but rather for those legitimate businessmen whose normal business practices require contracts for future delivery, and I emphasize "normal" and "require."

The House receded to the Senate provision in section 402 (b) (3) providing ceilings on agricultural commodities with an amendment providing that the base price be the "highest" during May 24 to June 24—rather than "the price."

The Senate receded to the House and accepted the House language on the imposition of price ceilings for milk. It was recognized that difficulties might arise in the administration of these provisions, and consideration may have to be given to changes in the light of experience under the act.

The House receded to the Senate provision relating to the exception for rates charged to public utility and common carriers and providing for notice and intervention by the Federal Government before the public authority having jurisdiction to consider such rate increases by offering a substitute amendment, the net effect of which was to restrict the right of intervention to rate increases on services sold for resale and not make it applicable in the cases where applications were filed before the issuance of the stabilization regulation or order.

The House was adamant in its refusal to accept the amendment providing a reasonable margin of profits to each segment of the meat-processing industry on cattle and calves, lamb and sheep, and hogs. The Senate at the very end of the conference finally receded. The House conferees pointed out the other provision in the bill (sec. 402 (c)) designed to provide reasonable margins of profit and fair and equitable treatment. They also asserted that a reasonable profit to each segment on each species would assure excessive profits to integrated producers who normally made an over-all profit, in spite of small margins on some steps in the process.

The House receded to the Senate on section 402 (i) prohibiting the elimination or restricting the use of brand names, grade labeling, etc., except where no alternative exists for effective price control.

The House only at the very end of the conference agreed to recede to the Senate provision requiring the President to set up a single agency to administer price, wage, and rationing control whenever he imposes general price and wage controls. While there is a provision preventing the delegation of the enforcement of any controls, the conferees agreed that the investigatory and inspection services of existing agencies should be fully utilized, and the Senate provision for handling litigation through the Department of Justice was retained.

The House accepted the Senate provision removing wage stabilization regulations or orders from review by the Emergency Court of Appeals as suggested by Cyrus Ching.

The Senate most reluctantly at the very end of the conference, and only with the concurrence of the junior Senator from Ohio, yielded to the deletion of the provision (407 (d)) permitting any court of competent jurisdiction to pass upon a price regulation when involved in a case otherwise properly pending before it. The conference substitute retains the House provision, with an additional provision which permits recourse to the Emergency Court of Appeals when the validity of a regulation is questioned in a civil or criminal case in the district or other court and provides for staying such cases until the Emergency Court of Appeals makes the determination.

The Williams amendment relating to Government contracts for purchase of processed chickens and turkeys was retained.

TITLE V

The labor disputes title of the Senate was accepted by the House with amendment which merely indicates more specific avenues through which the President may bring labor and management together. Certainly the President may wish to use these and other voluntary means, such as conferences and consultations, to assist him in carrying out the purposes of this title. The President is also authorized to use such persons and agencies as he deems appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

It is my expectation that labor and management generally will cooperate in an endeavor to work out, in conferences and other consultations, voluntary means for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes, so as to avoid interruption of essential production. Such voluntary cooperation can, of course, only be effective if the great majority of labor, management, and the public approve the basic principles involved, and consider them fair and equitable to all interests. It is my hope and my expectation that such general agreement can and will be obtained and that there will be few, if any, who do not agree.

TITLE VI

This title was made clearly applicable only to control of consumer credit and real-estate construction credit by the addition of a new sentence at the beginning of the title. This is what the Senate had intended.

The House agreed to recede to the Senate language on control of consumer credit with an amendment authorizing the administration of Regulation W by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

The Senate agreed to recede to the House language on the control of real-estate construction. The chief difference between the House and Senate was in the matter of administrative responsibility. The Senate had placed the responsibility for the control of conventional real-estate credit in the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the control of governmentally guaranteed and insured credit in the hands of the President after consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System The House simply put the responsibility on the President for him to delegate it as he chooses.

The Senate report referred to loans secured by savings and loan associations. While it is not the intention of the conferees to tell the Board how to administer credit controls, it does wish to direct its attention to the fact that if the Board, in carrying out the purposes of the title, decides to treat one type of institution or savings or share account one way, then it believes equal treatment be accorded other similar institutions and types of accounts.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

The House receded to the Senate amendment requiring allocations of supplies available for civilian use on the basis of the pre-Korean pattern of distribution. The House insisted, however, on an amendment to this provision which they felt would make the provision more practicable. The House conferees felt, and urged their position vigorously, that the version of this provision adopted by the Senate seemed to give an appearance of assurance to businessmen which might be deceptive, and also that the administrative burden of assuring to each of the thousands of individual businesses in the country a fair share of an allocated material might be entirely impossible. Accordingly, the conference substitute provides that if allocation of material makes a significant dislocation of normal distribution, a fair share must be made available, so far as practicable, for business and various segments thereof, in the normal channel of distribution. The conferees expect that the importance of this provision to our economy, and in particular to independent small business, will be fully recognized. It is vital to the maintenance of our competitive free-enterprise system.

TERMINATION DATE

Under the Senate bill the act terminated June 30, 1952, but with power in the Congress and the President to terminate at an earlier date.

In the House bill the termination date was June 30, 1951, and the House also provided that the Congress or the President might terminate at an earlier date.

The conference substitute is a compromise of these two versions. It provides that title I (dealing with priorities and allocation), title II (dealing with authority to requisition), title III (dealing with expansion of productive capacity and supply), and title VII (the general administrative provisions, including antitrust exemption and voluntary agreements and the so-called watchdog committee) shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, but that such titles shall be effective after June 30, 1951, only to the extent necessary to aid in carrying out contracts relating to the national defense entered into by the Government prior to July 1, 1951. This means that any action may be taken under these titles between June 30, 1951, and June 30, 1952, that will aid in carrying out Government contracts entered into prior to July 1, 1951. For example, priorities could be assigned to deliveries of materials to a contractor for use in carrying out such a contract, allocations of material could be made to the contractor, and property might be requisitioned for delivery to a contractor to aid him in carrying out his contract. Furthermore, under title VII it would be possible to provide for voluntary agreements, if that were necessary to carry out such a contract, and such agreements would be within the exemption from the antitrust laws.

This would, of course, include assistance to subcontractors under Government contracts and assistance in connection with materials needed to carry out the contract even though the materials were not incorporated into the articles being bought by the Government.

On the other hand, this provision would not permit the use of the powers in titles I, II, III, and VII during the period after June 30, 1951, to assist general civilian activities in support of the defense program, nor would it permit use of these powers to maintain the essential civilian economy or to prevent the strains and dislocations on wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, for which they could be used during the period up to June 30, 1951.

As to title IV (relating to price and wage stabilization), title V (relating to settlement of labor disputes), and title VI (relating to credit controls), these provisions and all authority conferred thereunder terminate next June 30.

There are included in the conference substitute, first, the authority to terminate by concurrent resolution of the Congress or by Presidential action; second, continuation of new agencies for not to exceed 6 months after termination of the provisions authorizing their creation, for purposes of liquidation only; and, third, a necessary saving clause relating to disbursements of funds and carrying out of contracts, guaranties, commitments, and other obligations entered into prior to the date of termination and permitting any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in amounts advanced or paid out.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the report, I wish to take this opportunity to commend the conferees on both sides of the aisle who have done what I believe to be a very constructive and magnificent piece of work in bringing about an agreement on the defense-production bill. No one knows better than does the Senator from Illinois the intricate and complex problems which are involved in a measure of this character. Obviously, it is not the kind of a bill any one Senator would probably agree to in every detail, but at the same time, as has been said repeatedly, and as we all know, legislation of this kind comes about through compromise; and of course this report represents a compromise.

Mr. President, I was especially interested in the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. ERICKER] with respect to the necessity of getting legislation of this kind on the statute books as rapidly as possible because of the world conditions which now exist.

Again, Mr. President, I commend the conferees on both sides of the aisle for the spirit of give and take which was absolutely necessary in order to bring back a bill of this character. I am sure the President of the United States will be very happy when he signs the bill and it becomes the law of the land.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. I wish to make a statement with regard to the question just posed by the Senator from Missouri, in order to clear it up so that there may be no doubt whatever regarding it.

The Senator from Missouri has raised the question as to whether agreements on the part of labor, management, and the other persons to be designated by the President, are necessary in order to meet the provisions of the section to which reference has been made. The answer is, of course, yes; and we all agree on that.

However, I do desire to point out that such agreements would not necessarily call for complete agreement among all the segments of labor and all the segments of management. We might never be able to get such an agreement, anyway. It would be indicated that there would have to be a majority vote within labor, or a majority vote within management, or presumably a majority vote of the group designated by the President, and then all three groups would have to agree among themselves.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I wish to be sure that I understand the Senator from New York. I think it is extremely important that there be no misunderstanding.

I understand from the Senator from New York that in order that the President may have the power to take the action mentioned in the second sentence of section 502 there must be an agreement by a majority of the members of labor, a majority of the members of management, and a majority of the representatives appointed by the President to represent the Government and the public.

Mr. IVES. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. DONNELL. And unless there is such an agreement by each and all those several segments, the President would not have the power conferred upon him by that section.

Mr. IVES. That is absolutely accurate.

Mr. DONNELL. Is that the interpretation of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is my interpretation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as soon as the vote is taken on the conference report, the Senate will return to the consideration of the tax bill, and it is my hope that we can speed along with that measure rapidly, because we are going to pass the tax bill before we leave here tonight. I made that statement yesterday, and I repeat it today. There are some amendments to be offered, of course. I hope the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] will be here immediately to offer his amendment dealing with the tax on copper; and there are some other amendments to be offered. But it seems to me we should not take too long on any of the amendments. They have been debated over and over again, and we should be able to make disposition of them in a hurry.

I know the Senator from Georgia is anxious to conclude consideration of the bill, as are all other Senators, and I do hope we will not drag it out until late this evening; but if necessary, we will remain here late to act on the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] had to leave the floor, and he was particularly eager to have one question cleared up regarding the conference report, and I promised him I would make a very brief statement, and ask the able chairman of our committee if the interpretation I am about to state is not correct.

On page 9, section 402, subdivision (ii) it is stated that exempt from controls are "rates or fees charged for professional services."

The question the Senator from Minnesota wants propounded is this: Would the fee charged for the work of a registered pharmacist in filling a prescription likewise be exempt under that definition?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yesterday we had quite a discussion of that question in the committee, and in the opinion of the ranking minority member of the committee, and in my opinion, I say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, such a fee would be exempt.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, there is no question about it. It was discussed by the conferees and agreed by the conferees that that was the fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on H. R. 9176.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the conference report calls for the appointment of a committee to make further study and to keep in touch with the administration of the law. Unfortunately, the appointment of that committee was left to me. I did not vote that it should be left to me, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] knows, but since it has been done, and it seemed to be the desire of some of the members of the committee that I appoint myself on the committee, I acquiesced, with the understanding that I would appoint the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], in addition to myself.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, informed the Senate that Hon. FRANCIS E. WALTER, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, was elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The message communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. ALFRED L. BULWINKLE, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message announced that the House had agreed to the following resolution:

House Resolution 838

Resolved, That when this House adjourns on Friday, September 1, 1950, it will adjourn to meet in the caucus room in the New House Office Building on Tuesday, September 5, 1950, and it shall continue to meet there until otherwise ordered.

Resolved, That all rules relating to the Hall of the House shall be applicable to the caucus room.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1271. An act for the relief of Carl E. Lawson and Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co.;

H. R. 2233. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Territory of Hawaii to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Ewa Plantation, a Hawaiian corporation;

H. R. 7302. An act to amend the act of July 14, 1943, relating to the establishment of the George Washington Carver National Monument, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8026. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of the remaining Government lots in the town site of St. Marks, Fla.;

H. R. 9038. An act to authorize the President to determine the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods and procedures, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 537. Joint resolution making emergency appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

INDUCTION OF MEDICAL, DENTAL, AND ALLIED SPECIALISTS — CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 4029) to amend the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended, so as to provide for special registration, classification, and induction of certain medical, dental, and allied specialist categories, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

(For conference report see p. 14173 of House proceedings, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 31, 1950.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee I should like to say to the Senate that any changes made from the bill as it passed the Senate are of no particular consequence. They are hardly worth bringing to the attention of the Senate, and unless some Seantor has some question he wishes to ask me, I shall not attempt to explain the technical and other minor changes made.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, as a member of the conference committee on behalf of the Senate I wish to call one section of the conference report to the attention of the Senate, but more especially comment on it so that there will be in the RECORD at least a statement of my understanding of why the section to which I shall refer is in the report and is now a part of the bill.

I refer to the language that appears on page 3, the third sentence in paragraph (j). It has to do with the performance of the duties of the National Advisory Committee, which will do the work of selecting the physicians and dentists. The conferees agreed to raise the age limit to 50 years for both physicians and dentists, but, of course, the function of the Advisory Committee is, first, to provide the necessary professional services for the Armed Forces, and, second, to take care of the health needs of the civilian population. In order to do that, the Advisory Committee must take into consideration, not only the doctors and dentists below 50 years of age, but all the practicing physicians and dentists, no matter what their age. I shall read the subsection to which I have referred:

In the performance of their functions, the National Advisory Committee and the State and local volunteer advisory committees shall give appropriate consideration to the respective needs of the Armed Forces and of the civilian population for the services of medical, dental, and allied specialist personnel; and, in determining the medical, dental, and allied specialist personnel available to serve the needs of any community, such committees shall give appropriate consideration to the availability in such community of medical, dental, and allied specialist personnel who have attained the 51st anniversary of their birth.

It was the purpose of the conferees, and the conferees agreed, that this meant that the advisory committees on the national, the State, and county levels, should take into consideration all the practicing physicians and dentists, no matter whether they are registered or not, and no matter what their age, in deciding whether or not a physician or dentist 50 years or less than that could be taken into the service. In other words, they would get the names and addresses and record of services rendered by practicing physicians and dentists over 50 years of age, from the State boards of health, from the records of the medication associations in the various States and in the Nation as a whole, and would consider all these members of the profession in deciding the number and identity of physicians and dentists who could be taken from each community. I am quite sure the chairman of the subcommittee agrees with that explanation. I hope I have made it plain.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, the third member of the committee.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, the distinguished junior Senator from Wyoming, like the senior Senator from South Dakota, the former able chairman of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, both devoted a great deal of time and study in preparing the bill, which I believe will prove of great benefit to the armed services, while at the same time providing sufficient medical and dental care for the people back home.

I rose and sought recognition in order that I might call attention to a clerical error in the conference report. The Senator from Wyoming was the very able chairman of the conferees, but through an error in drafting the report, the name of the Senator from Kentucky was placed as the head of the Senate conferees. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senate to that mistake, and to pay just tribute to both the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from South Dakota for their magnificent contribution to this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on Senate bill 4029.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 3121 OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3905) to amend section 3121 of the Internal Revenue Code, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Vice President appointed Mr. GEORGE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. MILLIKIN, and Mr. TAFT conferees on the part of the Senate.

JURISDICTION IN CIVIL ACTIONS INVOLVING CERTAIN INDIANS IN NEW YORK—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 192) to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 192) to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the governing body of any recognized tribe of Indians in the State of New York shall have the right to declare, by appropriate enactment prior to the effective date of this Act, those tribal laws and customs which they desire to preserve, which, on certification to the Secretary of the Interior by the governing body of such tribe shall be published in the Federal Register and thereafter shall govern in all civil cases involving reservation Indians when the subject matter of such tribal laws and customs is involved or at issue, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent such courts from recognizing and giving effect to any tribal law or custom which may be proven to the satisfaction of such courts:" ; and the House agree to same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2 and agree to the same.

JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
ERNEST W. MCFARLAND,
GUY CORDON,
HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
HUGH BUTLER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

J. HARDIN PETERSON,
TOBY MORRIS,
WESLEY A. D'EWART,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENSE FACILITIES ACT OF 1950—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8594) to provide for the acquisition, construction, expansion, rehabilitation, conversion, and joint utilization of facilities necessary for the administration and training of units of the Reserve components of the Armed Forces of the United States, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

(For conference report, see page 14102 of House proceedings, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 30, 1950.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

DEPORTATION OF THREE CHINESE STUDENTS—STATEMENT BY MR. MICHAEL MCDERMOTT

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement which I have received from the Department of State in connection with the story printed in the Washington Post this morning about the three Chinese students who were, according to the Associated Press story, listed as State Department exchange students and had been ordered to leave the United States. The statement from the Department explains the status of the students and gives their background.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INFORMATION TO BE FURNISHED TO THE PRESS BY MR. MICHAEL MCDERMOTT AT HIS PRESS CONFERENCE, 12 NOON, SEPTEMBER 1, 1950

The Department of State wishes to correct the Associated Press dispatch of August 31 from Boston stating that three Chinese students who have been ordered to depart by October 18 were brought to the United States under the State Department's exchange-student program. The three students in question were neither brought to the United States by the Department of State nor have they received any assistance under the Department's program of aid to stranded Chinese students in the United States. The Department has been reliably informed that these students came to the United States in 1949 on student visas under their own auspices.

All of the 2,506 Chinese students who have received grants under the current emergency program to date have been carefully screened by the Department. In addition, assistance in supervising the activities of these students is rendered by university officials designated by the presidents of some 400 universities throughout the country.

COMMENTS CONCERNING THE ARTICLE APPEARING IN THE WASHINGTON POST, SEPTEMBER 1, 1950, ENTITLED "THREE CHINESE STUDENTS SLUR UNITED STATES, GET GATE"

The Chinese students mentioned in the Associated Press dispatch from Boston came to the United States in 1949 under their own auspices, 4–E student visa, and with no connection whatsoever with the Department of State. Their names are Kuo Chuan Woo, Chung Sung Wu, Yun Chung-San. The names were obtained from the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

These students arrived in the United States after the termination date beyond which no student could receive assistance from the Department of State under the existing program of aid to Chinese students. The Department of State has developed effective controls through the university representatives to handle the students who are actually receiving assistance from the Department. There has been one case where a student was denied a grant at the University of Maine because of alleged Communist feelings. The other 2,500 students who have received grants from the State Department have, through various channels, been carefully checked and under continuous supervision through reputable men appointed by university presidents on 400 campuses to carry out this responsibility.

None of these three students came under the Fulbright program; they arrived in 1949, which indicates that they could not have come under the President's emergency fund program operative from 1945 to 1947, and there was no authority at the time of their entry whereby the Department of State could have assisted them.

The Department has remained in close contact with Immigration and Naturalization authorities at all times and has cooperated with the INS in regard to all problems concerning students.

REVENUE ACT OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCMAHON obtained the floor.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MCMAHON. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, at this time I offer a technical amendment which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was good enough to say he would take to conference. The amendment deals with a question raised with me by the Navy in relation to the term "compensation received in battle zones." The Senator from Georgia stated that he believed the point was covered, but would be glad to take the amendment to conference in order to make sure that it was covered. I offer the amendment and ask that it be agreed to, if my statement is confirmed by the Senator from Georgia. If not, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. MCMAHON. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 83, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the period, and insert a semicolon and the following:

(iv) The term "compensation received" as used in this paragraph shall include compensation earned in a combat zone although received outside of such zone.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think the amendment expresses the clear intent and purpose of the Congress, and the committee has no objection to it. We will take it to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, on half of my colleague [Mr. BENTON], and myself, I call up for consideration the amendment, which we have at the desk, bearing upon the suspension of the copper tariff. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

[Public Law 774—81st Congress]

[Chapter 932—2d Session]

[H. R. 9176]

AN ACT

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, provide for price and wage stabilization, provide for the settlement of labor disputes, strengthen controls over credit, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as "the Defense Production Act of 1950".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Authority to requisition.
Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title IV. Price and wage stabilization.
Title V. Settlement of labor disputes.
Title VI. Control of consumer and real estate credit.
Title VII. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

Sec. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. In order to prevent hoarding, no person shall accumulate (1) in excess of the reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation. This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in section 101 of this Act.

SEC. 103. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. (a) Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that all other means of obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall promptly determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid promptly 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, without regard to whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000, in any district court of the United States, within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

(b) Whenever the President determines that any real property acquired under this title and retained is no longer needed for the defense of the United States, he shall, if the original owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, return such property to the owner. In the event the President and the original owner do not agree as to the fair value of the property, the fair value shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the President, one by the original owner, and the third by the first two appraisers; the expenses of such determination shall be paid in equal shares by the Government and the original owner.

(c) Whenever the need for the national defense of any personal property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President, and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To expedite production and deliveries or services to aid in carrying out Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises (including research corporations not organized for profit) for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling, and no agricultural commodity shall be sold for such purposes at less than the higher of the following: (i) the current market price for such commodity, or (ii) the minimum sale price established for agricultural commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress.

(b) Subject to the limitations in subsection (a), purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under such subsection may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

(d) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by the United States Government, and to install Government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by private persons.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize such existing departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new agencies (other than corporations).

(b) Any agency created under this section, and any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under sections 302 and 303: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $600,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this subsection, the borrower may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at its option before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of obligations hereunder.

(c) In addition to the sums authorized to be borrowed under subsection (b), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303, such sums, not in excess of $1,400,000,000, as may be necessary therefor.

TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 402. (a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under section 708, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) (1) To the extent that the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service, and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

(2) Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. A ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (i) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (ii) such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense, (iii) the imposition of such ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, (iv) it is practicable and feasible to impose such ceiling, and (v) such ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of such material or service and to sellers and buyers of related or competitive materials and services.

(3) Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

(4) Whenever ceilings on prices have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living, the President (i) shall impose ceilings on prices and services generally, and (ii) shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation generally.

(5) In stabilizing wages under paragraph (3) of this subsection, the President shall issue regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling.

(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order. The President, in establishing and adjusting ceilings with respect to materials and services, and in stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, and other compensation, shall make such adjustments as he deems necessary to prevent or correct hardships or inequities.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection; but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 66⅔ per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. No ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the highest price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity; and in establishing the ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Prices or rentals for real property;

(ii) Rates or fees charged for professional services;

(iii) Prices or rentals for (a) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (b) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, or newspapers, other than as waste or scrap; or rates charged by any person in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting or television station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities;

(iv) Rates charged by any person in the business of selling or underwriting insurance;

(v) Rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility: Provided, That no common carrier or other public utility shall at any time after the President shall have issued any stabilization regulations and orders under subsection (b) make any increase in its charges for property or services sold by it for resale to the public, for which application is filed after the date of issuance of such stabilization regulations and orders, before the Federal, State or Municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase, unless it first gives

30 days' notice to the President, or such agency as he may designate, and consents to the timely intervention by such agency before the Federal, State or Municipal authority having jurisdiction to consider such increase;

(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

(g) The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

(h) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) as authorizing the elimination or any restriction of the use of trade and brand names; (2) as authorizing the President to require the grade labeling of any materials; (3) as authorizing the President to standardize any materials or services, unless the President shall determine, with respect to such standardization, that no practicable alternative exists for securing effective price control with respect to such materials or services; or (4) as authorizing any order of the President establishing price ceilings for different kinds, classes, or types of material or service, which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use in the trade or industry affected, or have previously been promulgated and their use lawfully required by another Government agency.

(i) No rule, regulation, or order issued under this title shall require any seller of materials at retail to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

SEC. 403. At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of Title I of this Act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose. Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department.

SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 405. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 406. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 407. (a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order relating to price controls under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of this Act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 408. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

(e) (1) Within thirty days after arraignment, or such additional time as the court may allow for good cause shown, in any criminal proceeding, and within five days after judgment in any civil or criminal proceeding, brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving alleged violation of any provision of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, the defendant may apply to the court in which the proceeding is pending for leave to file in the Emergency Court of Appeals a complaint against the President setting forth objections to the validity of any provision which the defendant is alleged to have violated or conspired to violate. The court in which the proceeding is pending shall grant such leave with respect to any objection which it finds is made in good faith and with respect to which it finds there is reasonable and substantial excuse for the defendant's failure to present such objection in a protest filed in accordance with section 407 of this title. Upon the filing of a complaint pursuant to and within thirty days from the granting of such leave, the Emergency Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside in whole or in part the provision of the regulation or order complained of or to dismiss the complaint. The court may authorize the introduction of evidence, either to the President or directly to the court, in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall be applicable with respect to any proceeding instituted in accordance with this subsection.

(2) In any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving an alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the court shall stay the proceeding—

(i) during the period within which a complaint may be filed in the Emergency Court of Appeals pursuant to leave granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision;

(ii) during the pendency of any protest properly filed by the defendant under section 407 of this title prior to the institution of the proceeding under section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, setting forth objections to the validity of such provision which the court finds to have been made in good faith; and

(iii) during the pendency of any judicial proceeding instituted by the defendant under this section with respect to such protest or instituted by the defendant under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision, and until the expiration of the time allowed in this section for the taking of further proceedings with respect thereto.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, stays shall be granted thereunder in civil proceedings only after judgment and upon application made within five days after judgment. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, in the case of a proceeding under section 409 (a) or 706 (a) of this Act the court granting a stay under this paragraph shall issue a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining or restraining, during the period of the stay, violations by the defendant of any provision of the regulation or order involved in the proceeding. If any provision of a regulation or order is determined to be invalid by judgment of the Emergency Court of Appeals which has become effective in accordance with section 408 (b) of this title, any proceeding pending in any court shall be dismissed, and any judgment in such proceeding vacated, to the extent that such proceeding or judgment is based upon violation of such provision. Except as provided in this subsection, the pendency of any protest under section 407 of this title, or judicial proceeding under this section, shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code; nor, except as provided in this subsection, shall any retroactive effect be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation or order issued under this title.

SEC. 409. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 405 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period, or compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. If such action is instituted, or such liability is compromised by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages, or a compromise, under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered, or prior to such compromise. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

SEC. 410. Each contract providing for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys by any department or agency of the United States from any contractor, entered into at any time when ceiling prices are in effect under this Act for whichever of such fowl is covered by such contract, shall contain the following provision (with such change as may be necessary to describe the fowl covered by the contract):

"The contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for live chickens or live turkeys to be processed hereunder. In the event and to the extent that the actual price paid to the producers of live chickens or live turkeys purchased for the performance of this contract is less than such estimated price, the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents or fraction thereof, per pound."

TITLE V

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. To this end, the President is authorized (1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President may designate to represent government and the public, and (2) subject to the provisions of section 503, to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. The President may designate such persons or agencies as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 503. In any such conference, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. No action inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or with other applicable laws shall be taken under this title.

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

THIS TITLE AUTHORIZES THE REGULATION OF CONSUMER CREDIT AND REAL ESTATE CONSTRUCTION CREDIT ONLY

SEC. 601. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 386, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 921), to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order Numbered 8843 (August 9, 1941) until such time as the President determines that the exercise of such controls is no longer necessary, but in no event beyond the date on which this section terminates.

SEC. 602. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this section or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any real estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this section; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this section, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this section to be registered; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration for violation of this section or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this section, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(d) For the purposes of this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, accounting, and other terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section:

(1) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

(2) "Credit" means any loan, mortgage, deed of trust, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

SEC. 603. Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601 or 602 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 604. All the present provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters), shall be as fully applicable with respect to the exercise by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System of credit controls under section 601 as they are now applicable with respect to the exercise by the Securities and Exchange Commission of its functions under that Act, and the Board shall have the same powers in the exercise of such credit controls as the Commission now has under the said sections 21 and 27.

SEC. 605. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act the President may at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States Government, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this Act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a significant dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such a manner as to make available, so far as practicable, for business and various segments thereof in the normal channel of distribution of such material, a fair share of the available civilian supply based, so far as practicable, on the share received by such business under normal conditions during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950 and having due regard to the needs of new businesses.

SEC. 702. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but not limited to, vacation and holiday payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

SEC. 703. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary), and he may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) The head and assistant heads of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this Act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this Act, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or to facilitate enforcement of this Act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act.

SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in this subsection, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the President, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited or willfully fails to perform any act required by the above provisions of this section, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year or both.

(e) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 706. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this Act, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act. All litigation arising under this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 708. (a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this Act.

(b) No act or omission to act pursuant to this Act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall be delegated only (1) to officials who shall for the purpose of such delegation be required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless otherwise required to be so appointed, and (2) upon the condition that such officials consult with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder, and (3) upon the condition that such officials obtain the approval of the Attorney General to any request thereunder before making the request. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this Act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

(e) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this Act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within ninety days after the approval of this Act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this Act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

Sec. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

(c) The President is authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act to employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof, as authorized by section 55a of title 5 of the United States Code. Individuals so employed may be compensated at rates not in excess of $50 per diem and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses while so employed. The President is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(d) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(e) Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives), receives, by virtue of his office or employment, confidential information, and (1) uses such information in speculating directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or (2) discloses such information for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. As used in this section, the term "speculate" shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity.

SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 712. (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production (hereinafter referred to as the committee), to be composed of ten members as follows:

(1) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and

(2) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members, one of whom shall be a member of the Senate and the other a member of the House of Representatives.

(b) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by this Act, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs. Upon request, the committee shall aid the standing committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any part of the programs authorized by this Act; and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. Any department, official, or agency administering any of such programs shall, at the request of the committee, consult with the committee, from time to time, with respect to their activities under this Act.

(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena (to be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the committee) or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

(e) The expenses of the committee under this section, which shall not exceed $50,000 in any fiscal year, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Clerk of the House of Representatives out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the Senate in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made without regard to any other provision of law.

SEC. 713. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 714. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 715. That no person may be employed under this Act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this Act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

SEC. 716. (a) Titles I, II, III, and VII of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, but such titles shall be effective after June 30, 1951 only to the extent necessary to aid in carrying out contracts relating to the national defense entered into by the Government prior to July 1, 1951.

(b) Titles IV, V, and VI of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1951.

(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing—

(1) The Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may terminate this Act prior to the termination otherwise provided therefor.

(2) The Congress may also provide by concurrent resolution that any section of this Act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate prior to the termination otherwise provided therefor.

(3) Any agency created under this Act may be continued in existence for purposes of liquidation for not to exceed six months after the termination of the provision authorizing the creation of such agency.

(d) The termination of any section of this Act, or of any agency or corporation utilized under this Act, shall not affect the disbursement of funds under, or the carrying out of, any contract, guarantee, commitment or other obligation entered into pursuant to this Act prior to the date of such termination, or the taking of any action necessary to preserve or protect the interests of the United States in any amounts advanced or paid out in carrying on operations under this Act.

THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950,[1] AS AMENDED BY THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1951 [2] AND THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1952 [3]

AN ACT

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, provide for price and wage stabilization, provide for the settlement of labor disputes, strengthen controls over credit, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as "the Defense Production Act of 1950".

SEC. 2. DECLARATION OF POLICY

It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy.

It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use, within the framework, as far as practicable, of the American system of competitive enterprise.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

(a)[4] The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders in preference to other contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense. No restriction, quota, or other limitation shall be placed upon the quantity of livestock which may be slaughtered or handled by any processor.[5] Nor shall any restriction or other limitation be established or maintained upon the species, type, or grade of livestock killed by any slaughterer, nor upon the types of slaughtering operations, including religious rituals, employed by any slaughterer; nor shall any requirements or regulations be established or maintained relating to the allocation or distribution of meat or meat products unless, and for the period for which, the Secretary of Agriculture shall have determined and certified to the President that the over-all supply of meat and meat products is inadequate to meet the civilian or military needs therefor: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be construed to prohibit the President from requiring the grading and grade marking of meat and meat products.[6]

gress have been met through allocations and priorities it shall be the policy of the United States to encourage the maximum supply of raw materials for the civilian economy, including small business, thus increasing employment opportunities and minimizing inflationary pressures. No agreement shall be entered into by the United States limiting total United States consumption of any material unless such agreement authorizes domestic users in the United States to purchase the quantity of such material allocated to other countries participating in the International Materials Conference and not used by any such participating country. Nothing contained in this Act shall impair the authority of the President under this Act to exercise allocation and priorities controls over materials (both domestically produced and imported) and facilities through the controlled materials plan or other methods of allocation.[7]

SEC. 102. HOARDING AND ACCUMULATING

In order to prevent hoarding, no person shall accumulate (1) in excess of the reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption, or (2) for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices, materials which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation. [This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in section 101 of this Act.] In making such designations the President may prescribe such conditions with respect to the accumulation of materials in excess of the reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption as he deems necessary to carry out the objectives of this Act. This section shall not be construed to limit the authority contained in sections 101 and 704 of this Act.[8]

SEC. 103. WILLFUL VIOLATION

Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 104. IMPORT CONTROLS

[Import controls of fats and oils (including oil-bearing materials, fatty acids, and soap and soap powder, but excluding petroleum and petroleum products and coconuts and coconut products), peanuts, butter, cheese and other dairy products, and rice and rice products are necessary for the protection of the essential security interests and economy of the United States in the existing emergency in international relations, and no imports of any such commodity or product shall be admitted to the United States until after June 30, 1952, which the Secretary of Agriculture determines would (a) impair or reduce the domestic production of any such commodity or product below present production levels, or below such higher levels as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in view of domestic and international conditions, or (b) interfere with the orderly domestic storing and marketing of any such commodity or product, or (c) result in any unnecessary burden or expenditures under any Government price support program. The President shall exercise the authority and powers conferred by this section.]

Import controls of fats and oils (including oil-bearing materials, fatty acids, and soap and soap powder, but excluding petroleum and petroleum products and coconuts and coconut products), peanuts, butter, cheese and other dairy products, and rice and rice products are necessary for the protection of the essential security interests and economy of the United States in the existing emergency in international relations, and imports into the United States of any such commodity or product, by types or varieties, shall be limited to such quantities as the Secretary of Agriculture finds would not (a) impair or reduce the domestic production of any such commodity or product below present production levels, or below such higher levels as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in view of domestic and international conditions, or (b) interfere with the orderly domestic storing and marketing of any such commodity or product, or (c) result in any unnecessary burden or expenditures under any Government price support program: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture after establishing import limitations, may permit additional imports of each type and variety of the commodities specified in the section, not to exceed 15 per centum of the import limitation with respect to each type and variety which he may deem necessary, taking into consideration the broad effects upon international relationships and trade. The President shall exercise the authority and powers conferred by this section.[9]

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION AND CONDEMN [10]

SEC. 201. REQUISITIONING, CONDEMNING AND RETURNING PROPERTY

(a) Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that all other means of obtaining the use of such property for the defense of the United States upon fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall promptly determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid promptly 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, without regard to whether the amount involved exceeds $10,000, in any district court of the United States, within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. No real property (other than equipment and facilities, and buildings and other structures, to be demolished and use as scrap or second-hand materials) shall be acquired under this subsection.[11]

(b) Whenever the President deems it necessary in the interest of national defense, he may acquire by purchase, donation, or other means of transfer, or may cause proceedings to be instituted in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings to acquire by condemnation, any real property, including facilities, temporary use thereof, or other interest therein, together with any personal property located thereon or used therewith, that he deems necessary for the national defense, such proceedings to be in accordance with the Act of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357), as amended, or any other applicable Federal statute. Before condemnation proceedings are instituted pursuant to this section, an effort shall be made to acquire the property involved by negotiation unless, because of reasonable doubt as to the identity of the owner or owners, because of the large number of persons with whom it would be necessary to negotiate, or for other reasons, the effort to acquire by negotiation would involve, in the judgment of the President, such delay in acquiring the property as to be contrary to the interest of national defense. In any condemnation proceeding instituted pursuant to this section, the court shall not order the party in possession to surrender possession in advance of final judgment unless a declaration of taking has been filed, and a deposit of the amount estimated to be just compensation has been made, under the first section of the Act of February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421), providing for such declarations. Unless title is in dispute, the court, upon application, shall promptly pay to the owner at least 75 per centum of the amount so deposited, but such payment shall be made without prejudice to any party to the proceeding. Property acquired under this section may be occupied, used, and improved for the purposes of this section prior to the approval of title by the Attorney General as required by section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.[12]

(c)[13] Whenever the President determines that any real property acquired under this title and retained is no longer needed for the defense of the United States, he shall, if the original owner desires the property and pays the fair value thereof, return such property to the owner. In the event the President and the original owner do not agree as to the fair value of the property, the fair value shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be chosen by the President, one by the original owner, and the third by the first two appraisers; the expenses of such determination shall be paid in equal shares by the Government and the original owner.

(d)[14] Whenever the need for the national defense of any personal property [requisitioned] acquired[15] under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. FINANCING THE EXPANSION

(a) In order to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement for the national defense as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be necessary to expedite production and deliveries or services under Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President, and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. LOANS TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

To expedite production and deliveries or services to aid in carrying out Government contracts for the procurement of materials or the performance of services for the national defense, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises (including research corporations not organized for profit) for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials, including the exploration, development, and mining of strategic and critical metals and minerals, and manufacture of newsprint.[16] Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. PURCHASES AND COMMITMENTS TO PURCHASE

[SEC. 303.[17] (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale; and (2) for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include agricultural commodities except insofar as such commodities may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling, and no agricultural commodity shall be sold for such purposes at less than the higher of the following: (i) the current market price for such commodity, or (ii) the minimum sale price established for agricultural commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress.

[16] Added by sec. 104, 1952 Amendments.

[17] Sec. 303 entirely revised by sec. 103 (a), 1951 Amendments.

(b) Subject to the limitations in subsection (a), purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under such subsection may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

(d) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by the United States Government, and to install Government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by private persons.]

(a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision (1) for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other materials, for Government use or resale; and (2) for the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals: Provided, however, That purchases for resale under this subsection shall not include that part of the supply of an agricultural commodity which is domestically produced except insofar as such domestically produced supply may be purchased for resale for industrial uses or stockpiling, and no commodity purchased under this subsection shall be sold at less than the established ceiling price for such commodity (except that minerals and metals shall not be sold at less than the established ceiling price, or the current domestic market price, whichever is lower), or, if no ceiling price has been established, the higher of the following: (i) the current domestic market price for such commodity, or (ii) the minimum sale price established for agricultural commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation as provided in section 407 of Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress: Provided further, however, That no purchase or commitment to purchase any imported agricultural commodity shall be made calling for delivery more than one year after the expiration of this Act.

(b) Subject to the limitations in subsection (a), purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under such subsection may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, but not extending beyond June 30, 1962, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than established ceiling prices (or if there be no established ceiling prices, currently prevailing market prices) or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) If the President finds—

(1) that under generally fair and equitable ceiling prices for any raw or nonprocessed material, there will result a decrease in supplies from high-cost sources of such material, and that the continuation of such supplies is necessary to carry out the objectives of the Act; or

(2) that an increase in cost of transportation is temporary in character and threatens to impair maximum production or supply in any area at stable prices of any materials, he may make provision for subsidy payments on any such domestically produced material other than an agricultural commodity in such amounts and in such manner (including purchases of such material and its resale at a loss without regard to the limitations of existing law), and on such terms and conditions, as he determines to be necessary to insure that supplies from such high-cost sources are continued, or that maximum production or supply in such area at stable prices of such materials is maintained, as the case may be.

(d) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store and have processed and refined, any materials procured under this section.

(e) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by the United States Government, and to install government-owned equipment in plants, factories, and other industrial facilities owned by private persons.

SEC. 304. NEW AGENCIES; AUTHORITY TO BORROW

(a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize such existing departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new agencies (other than corporations).

(b) Any agency created under this section, and any department, agency, official, or corporation utilized pursuant to this section is authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under sections 302 and 303: [Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $600,000,000 outstanding at any one time.] Provided, That the amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such borrowers shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,100,000,000 outstanding at any one time: Provided further, That when any contract, agreement, loan, or other transaction heretofore or hereafter entered into pursuant to section 302 or 303 imposes contingent liability upon the United States, such liability shall be considered for the purposes of sections 3679 and 3732 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, as an obligation only to the extent of the probable ultimate net cost to the United States under such transaction; and the President shall submit a report to the Congress not less often than once each quarter setting forth the gross amount of each such transaction entered into by any agency of the United States Government under this authority and the basis for determining the probable ultimate net cost to the United States thereunder.[18] For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this subsection, the borrower may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at its option before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations and for such pur-

[(c) In addition to the sums authorized to be borrowed under subsection (b), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of sections 302 and 303, such sums, not in excess of $1,400,000,000, as may be necessary therefor.] [19]

TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 401. CONGRESSIONAL INTENT

It is the intent of Congress to provide authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense: To prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to assist in maintaining a reasonable balance between purchasing power and the supply of consumer goods and services; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

[19] Deleted by sec. 103 (c), 1951 Amendments.

SEC. 402. AUTHORITY TO REGULATE PRICES AND WAGES; EXEMPTIONS; STANDARDS

(a) In order to carry out the objectives of this title, the President may encourage and promote voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers. In proceeding under this subsection the President may exercise the authority to approve voluntary programs and agreements conferred on him under section 708, and may utilize the services of persons and agencies as provided in section 710.

(b) (1) To the extent that the objectives of this title cannot be attained by action under subsection (a), the President may issue regulations and orders establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery, or the purchase or receipt, by or to any person, of any material or service, and at the same time shall issue regulations and orders stabilizing wages, salaries, and other compensation in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

(2) Action under this subsection may be taken either with respect to individual materials and services and to individual types of employment, or with respect to materials, services, and types of employment generally. A ceiling may be established with respect to an individual material or service only when the President finds that (i) the price of the material or service has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (ii) such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense, (iii) the imposition of such ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, (iv) it is practicable and feasible to impose such ceiling, and (v) such ceiling will be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of such material or service and to sellers and buyers of related or competitive materials and services.

(3) Whenever a ceiling has been imposed with respect to a particular material or service, the President shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation in the industry or business producing the material or performing the service.

(4) Whenever ceilings on prices have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living, the President (i) shall impose ceilings on prices and services generally, and (ii) shall stabilize wages, salaries, and other compensation generally.

(5) In stabilizing wages under paragraph (3) of this subsection, the President shall issue regulations prohibiting increases in wages, salaries, and other compensation which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling.

(c) So far as practicable, in exercising the authority conferred in this section, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to comparable salaries, wages, or other compensation, which he finds to be representative of those prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or, in case none prevailed during this period or if those prevailing during this period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, then those prevailing on the nearest date on which, in the judgment of the President, they are generally representative. The President shall also give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services, he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or by persons performing the service, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such wages, salaries, or other compensation. Any regulation or order under this title shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order. The President, in establishing and adjusting ceilings with respect to materials and services, and in stabilizing and adjusting wages, salaries, and other compensation, shall make such adjustments as he deems necessary to prevent or correct hardships or inequities.

(d) (1) Regulations and orders issued under this title shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, except as provided in this subsection; but the President shall make appropriate provision to prevent hardships and inequities to sellers who have bona fide contracts in effect on the date of issuance of any such regulation or order for future delivery of materials in which seasonal demands or normal business practices require contracts for future delivery.

(2) No wage, salary, or other compensation shall be stabilized at less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No regulation or order shall be issued or remain in effect under this title which prohibits the payment or receipt of hourly wages at a rate of $1 per hour or less.[20] No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(3) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iii) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior to May 24, 1950, in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture to a level in line with the level of prices received by producers for agricultural commodities generally during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, and adjusted by the Secretary for grade, location, and seasonal differentials, or (iv) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 75 per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price (as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted for grade differentials) equal to 66⅔ per centum of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. No ceilings shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the highest price therefor specified in this subsection: Provided, That in establishing and maintaining ceilings on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing; and equitable treatment shall be accorded to all such processors.[21] Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity; and in establishing the ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of this Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), the President shall give due consideration to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established. No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below 90 per centum of the price received (by grade) by producers on May 19, 1951, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.[22] [Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act.][23] Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of either (1) the Agricultural Act of 1949, except that under any price support program announced while this title is in effect the level of support to cooperators shall be 90 per centum of the parity price, or such higher level as may be established under section 402 of that Act, for any crop of any basic agricultural commodity with respect to which producers have not disapproved marketing quotas,[24] or (2) the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas. No ceiling prices to producers for milk or butterfat used for manufacturing dairy products shall be issued until and unless the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that such prices are reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect the supply and demand for dairy products, and will insure a sufficient quantity of dairy products and be in the public interest. The prices so determined shall be adjusted by him for use, grade, quality, location, and season of the year.[25] No ceiling prices for products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, milk, and other dairy products, shall be established or maintained in any agricultural marketing area at levels which deny to any processor of such products the cost adjustments provided in paragraph (4) of this subsection and which deny to any distributor or seller of such products the customary margin or charge provided in subsection (k) of this section. Where a State regulatory body is authorized to establish minimum and/or maximum prices for sales of fluid milk, ceiling prices established for such sales under this title shall (1) not be less than the minimum prices, or (2) be equal to the maximum prices, established by such regulatory body, as the case may be: And provided further, That in the case of prices of milk established by any State regulatory body, with respect to which prices, parties may be deemed to contract, no ceiling price may be maintained under this title which is less than the price so established.

[25] Added by sec. 104 (d), 1951 Amendments.

No ceiling shall be established or maintained under this title for fruits or vegetables in fresh or processed form.[26]

(4) After the enactment of this paragraph no ceiling price on any material (other than an agricultural commodity) or on any service shall become effective which is below the lower of (A) the price prevailing just before the date of issuance of the regulation or order establishing such ceiling price, or (B) the price prevailing during the period January 25, 1951, to February 24, 1951, inclusive. Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit the establishment or maintenance of a ceiling price with respect to any material (other than an agricultural commodity) or service which (1) is based upon the highest price between January 1, 1950, and June 24, 1950, inclusive, if such ceiling price reflects adjustments for increases or decreases in costs occurring subsequent to the date on which such highest price was received and prior to July 26, 1951, or (2) is established under a regulation issued prior to the enactment of this paragraph. Upon application and a proper showing of his prices and costs by any person subject to a ceiling price, the President shall adjust such ceiling price in the manner prescribed in clause (1) of the preceding sentence. For the purposes of this paragraph the term "costs" includes material, indirect and direct labor, factory, selling, advertising, office, and all other production, distribution, transportation and administration costs, except such as the President may determine to be unreasonable and excessive.[27] The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply in the case of a seller of a material at retail or wholesale within the meaning of subsection (k) of this section.[28]

(5) For the purpose of determining the applicable ceiling price under the general ceiling price regulation issued January 26, 1951, as amended, any sale of fertilizer to the ultimate user by a person who acquired it for resale shall be considered a retail sale.[29]

(e) The authority conferred by this title shall not be exercised with respect to the following:

(i) Prices or rentals for real property;

(ii) [Rates or fees charged for professional services;] Rates or fees charged for professional services; wages, salaries, and other compensation paid to physicians employed in a professional capacity by licensed hospitals, clinics and like medical institutions for the care of the sick or disabled; wages, salaries and other compensation paid to attorneys licensed to practice law employed in a professional capacity by an attorney or firm of attorneys engaged in the practice of his or

(vi) Margin requirements on any commodity exchange.

(vii) Prices charged and wages paid for services performed by barbers and beauticians.[33]

(viii) Rates, fees, and charges for materials or services supplied directly by the States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, and their political subdivisions and municipalities, the District of Columbia, and any agency of any of the foregoing.[34]

(ix) Wages, salaries, or other compensation of persons employed in small-business enterprises as defined in this paragraph: Provided, however, That the President may from time to time exclude from this exemption such enterprises on the basis of industries, types of business, occupations, or areas, if their exemption would be unstabilizing with respect to wages, salaries, or other compensation, prices, or manpower, or would otherwise be contrary to the purposes of this Act. A small-business enterprise, for the purpose of this paragraph, is any enterprise in which a total of eight or less persons are employed in all its establishments, branches, units, or affiliates. This paragraph shall become effective thirty days after its enactment.[34]

(x) Prices charged and wages paid by bowling alleys.[34]

(f) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials or services, or transactions therein, or that compensation for such types of employment be stabilized, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title.

(g) The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except where such action is affirmatively found by the President to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title.

(h) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) as authorizing the elimination or any restriction of the use of trade and brand names; (2) as authorizing the President to require the grade labeling of any materials; (3) as authorizing the President to standardize any materials or services, unless the President shall determine, with respect to such standardization, that no practicable alternative exists for securing effective price control with respect to such materials or services; or (4) as authorizing any order of the President establishing price ceilings for different kinds, classes, or types of material or service, which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use in the trade or industry affected, or have previously been promulgated and their use lawfully required by another Government agency.

(i) No rule, regulation, or order issued under this title shall require any seller of materials at retail to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

(j) Where the sale or delivery of a material or service makes the person selling or delivering it liable for a State or local gross receipts tax or gross income tax, he may receive for the material or service involved, in addition to the ceiling price, (1) an amount equal to the amount of all such State and local taxes for which the transaction makes him liable, or (2) one cent, whichever is greater. For the purposes of the preceding sentence, the amount of tax liability shall be computed on shipping units at the ceiling price, and a fractional part of a cent in the amount of tax liability shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to one cent.[35]

Prior to making any finding that a specific item of material shall be so excepted, or as to the amount of the reductions in customary margins to be imposed upon retail and wholesale sellers of such item, the President shall consult with representatives of the affected retail and wholesale sellers concerning the basis for and the amount of the exception which is proposed with respect to any such item.

For purposes of this section a person is a "seller of a material at retail or wholesale" to the extent that such person purchases and resells an item of material without substantially altering its form; or to the extent that such person sells to ultimate consumers except (1) to government and institutional consumers and (2) to consumers who purchase for consumption in the course of trade or business.[37]

(l) No rule, regulation, order, or amendment thereto issued under this title shall fix a ceiling on the price paid or received on the sale or delivery of any material in any State below the minimum sales price of such material fixed by the State law (other than any so-called 'fair trade law') now in effect, or by regulation issued pursuant to such law.[38]

(m) No rule, regulation, order, or amendment thereto shall be issued or maintained under this title, which shall deny to any hotel supply house or combination distributor, affiliated with any slaughterer or slaughtering establishment, or to any wholesaler so affiliated but whose affiliation does not amount to an interest or equity of more than 50 per centum, the same ceiling price or prices for meat accorded to hotel supply houses, combination distributors, or wholesalers which are not so affiliated.[39]

(n) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, whenever price ceilings are declared in effect on any agricultural commodity at the farm level, the Director of Price Stabilization must at the same time put into effect margin controls on processors, wholesalers, and retailers, such margin controls to allow the processors, wholesalers, and retailers the normal mark-ups as provided under this Act, except that under no circumstances are the sellers to be allowed greater than their normal margins of profit.[40]

SEC. 403. SEPARATE CONTROLS AGENCY

(a) [41] At such time as the President determines that it is necessary to impose price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, he shall administer such controls, and rationing at the retail level of consumer goods for household and personal use under authority of Title I of this Act (when and to the extent that he exercises such authority), through a new independent agency created for such purpose[.]: Provided, however, That the President shall administer any controls over the wages or salaries of employees subject to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, as amended, through a separate board or panel having jurisdiction only over such employees.[42] Such agency may utilize the services, information, and facilities of other agencies and departments of the Government, but such agency shall not delegate enforcement of any of the controls to be administered by it under this section to any other agency or department.

(b) (1) There is hereby created, in the present Economic Stabilization Agency, or any successor agency, a Wage Stabilization Board (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Board'), which shall be composed, in equal numbers, of members representative of the general public, members representative of labor, and members representative of business and industry. The number of offices on the Board shall be established by Executive order.

(2) The members of the Board shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President shall designate a Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Board from among the members representative of the general public.

(3) The term of office of the members of the Board shall terminate on May 1, 1953. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

(4) Each member representative of the general public shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 a year, and while a member of the Board shall engage in no other business, vocation, or employment. Each member representative of labor, and each member representative of business and industry, shall receive $50 for each day he is actually engaged in the performance of his duties as a member of the Board, and in addition he shall be paid his actual and necessary travel and subsistence expenses in accordance with the Travel Expense Act of 1949 while so engaged away from his home or regular place of business. The members representative of labor, and the members representative of business and industry, shall, in respect of their functions on the Board, be exempt from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(5) The Board shall, under the supervision and direction of the Economic Stabilization Administrator—

(A) formulate, and recommend to such Administrator for promulgation, general policies and general regulations relating to the stabilization of wages, salaries, and other compensation; and

(B) upon the request of (i) any person substantially affected thereby, or (ii) any Federal department or agency whose functions, as provided by law, may be affected thereby or may have an effect thereon, advise as to the interpretation, or the application to particular circumstances, of policies and regulations promulgated by such Administrator which relate to the stabilization of wages, salaries, and other compensation.

For the purposes of this Act, stabilization of wages, salaries, and other compensation means prescribing maximum limits thereon. Except as provided in clause (B) of this paragraph, the Board shall have no jurisdiction with respect to any labor dispute or with respect to any issue involved therein. Labor disputes, and labor matters in dispute, which do not involve the interpretation or application of such regulations or policies shall be dealt with, if at all, insofar as the Federal Government is concerned, under the conciliation, mediation, emergency, or other provisions of laws heretofore or hereafter enacted by the Congress.

(6) Paragraph (5) of this subsection shall take effect thirty days after the date on which this subsection is enacted. The Wage Stabilization Board created by Executive Order Numbered 10161, and reconstituted by Executive Order Numbered 10233, as amended by Executive Order Numbered 10301, is hereby abolished, effective at the close of the twenty-ninth day following the date on which this subsection is enacted. After June 27, 1952, the present Wage Stabilization Board shall issue no regulation or order except with respect to individual cases pending before the Board prior to such date.[43]

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the stabilization of the salaries and other compensation of persons (not represented in their relationships or eligible to be so represented with their employer by duly certified or recognized labor organizations) employed as outside salesmen or in bona fide executive, administrative, or professional capacities, as such terms are defined in the regulations issued in pursuance of section 13 (a) (1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or as supervisors, as defined by the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended, shall be administered by the Salary Stabilization Board and the Office of Salary Stabilization as presently established within the Economic Stabilization Agency, or any successor agency, subject to the supervsion and direction of the Economic Stabilization Administrator.[43]

(d) It shall be the express duty, obligation, and function of the present Economic Stabilization Agency, or any successor agency, to coordinate the relationship between prices and wages, and to stabilize prices and wages.[43]

SEC. 404. CONSULTATION WITH COMMITTEES

In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 405. VIOLATIONS

(a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt or agree to do any of the foregoing. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any payment made, either in money or property, by any person in violation of any such regulation, order, or requirement shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any such person for the purposes of any other law or regulation, including bases in determining gain for tax purposes.[44]

(b) No employer shall pay, and no employee shall receive, any wage, salary, or other compensation in contravention of any regulation or order promulgated by the President under this title. The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any wage, salary, or compensation payment made in contravention of any such regulation or order shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any employer for the purposes of any other law or regulation.

SEC. 406. COMPULSORY SALES OR SERVICES

Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform personal services.

SEC. 407. PROTESTS

(a) At any time within six months after the effective date of any regulation or order [relating to price controls under this title] relating to price controls under this title or rent controls under the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended or, in the case of [44] Added by sec. 104 (i), 1951 Amendments.

new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order [relating to price controls], within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.[45]

(b) In the administration of this title and the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of this Act [.], or section 206 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, as the case may be.[46]

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 408. COURT RELIEF

[(a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title; except that the court shall not have power to issue any temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying or restraining, in whole or in part, the effectiveness of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order relating to price controls, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

(e) (1) Within thirty days after arraignment, or such additional time as the court may allow for good cause shown, in any criminal proceeding, and within five days after judgment in any civil or criminal proceeding, brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving alleged violation of any provision of any regulation or order relating to price controls issued under this title, the defendant may apply to the court in which the proceeding is pending for leave to file in the Emergency Court of Appeals a complaint against the President setting forth objections to the validity of any provision which the defendant is alleged to have violated or conspired to violate. The court in which the proceeding is pending shall grant such leave with respect to any objection which it finds is made in good faith and with respect to which it finds there is reasonable and substantial excuse for the defendant's failure to present such objection in a protest filed in accordance with section 407 of this title. Upon the filing of a complaint pursuant to and within thirty days from the granting of such leave, the Emergency Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside in whole or in part the provision of the regulation or order complained of or to dismiss the complaint. The court may authorize the introduction of evidence, either to the President or directly to the court, in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall be applicable with respect to any proceeding instituted in accordance with this subsection.

(2) In any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving an alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the court shall stay the proceeding—

(i) during the period within which a complaint may be filed in the Emergency Court of Appeals pursuant to leave granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision;

(ii) during the pendency of any protest properly filed by the defendant under section 407 of this title prior to the institution of the proceeding under section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, setting forth objections to the validity of such provision which the court finds to have been made in good faith; and

(iii) during the pendency of any judicial proceeding instituted by the defendant under this section with respect to such protest or instituted by the defendant under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision, and until the expiration of the time allowed in this section for the taking of further proceedings with respect thereto.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, stays shall be granted thereunder in civil proceedings only after judgment and upon application made within five days after judgment. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, in the case of a proceeding under section 409 (a) or 706 (a) of this Act the court granting a stay under this paragraph shall issue a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining or restraining, during the period of the stay, violations by the defendant of any provision of the regulation or order involved in the proceeding. If any provision of a regulation or order is determined to be invalid by judgment of the Emergency Court of Appeals which has become effective in accordance with section 408 (b) of this title, any proceeding pending in any court shall be dismissed, and any judgment in such proceeding vacated, to the extent that such proceeding or judgment is based upon violation of such provision. Except as provided in this subsection, the pendency of any protest under section 407 of this title, or judicial proceeding under this section, shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act or section 371 of title 18, United States Code; nor, except as provided in this subsection, shall any retroactive effect be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation or order issued under this title.]

(a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon such filing, the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceeding and of all questions determined therein, and shall have power to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper; to permanently enjoin or set aside, in whole or in part, the regulation or order or the amendment of or supplement to the regulation or order protested; to make and enter upon the pleadings, evidence, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the President; to dismiss the petition; or to remand the proceeding to the President for further action in accordance with the court's decree: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. The findings of the President with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) The Emergency Court of Appeals is hereby continued for the purpose of the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title, with the powers herein specified, together with the powers heretofore granted by law to such court which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title. The court shall have the powers of a district court with respect to the jurisdiction conferred on it by this title. So far as necessary to decision the court shall decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, interpret the meaning or applicability of the terms of any official action under this title or under this Act, as amended, of which this title is a part and with respect to this title, or under the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended. The court shall exercise its powers and prescribe rules governing its procedure in such manner as to expedite the determination of cases of which it has jurisdiction under this title.

(c) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a United States court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any such regulation or order issued under this title, or under the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title, or the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

(d) (1) Within thirty days after arraignment, or such additional time as the court may allow for good cause shown, in any criminal proceeding, and within five days after judgment in any civil or criminal proceeding, brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act, section 205 or 206 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the defendant may apply to the court in which the proceeding is pending for leave to file in the Emergency Court of Appeals a complaint against the President setting forth objections to the validity of any provision which the defendant is alleged to have violated or conspired to violate. The court in which the proceeding is pending shall grant such leave with respect to any objection which it finds is made in good faith and with respect to which it finds there is reasonable and substantial excuse for the defendant's failure to present such objection in a protest filed in accordance with section 407 of this title. Upon the filing of a complaint pursuant to and within thirty days from the granting of such leave, the Emergency Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside in whole or in part the provision of the regulation or order complained of or to dismiss the complaint.

The court may authorize the introduction of evidence, either to the President or directly to the court, in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. The provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall be applicable with respect to any proceeding instituted in accordance with this subsection.

(2) In any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act, section 205 or 206 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, involving an alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the court shall stay the proceeding—

(i) during the period within which a complaint may be filed in the Emergency Court of Appeals pursuant to leave granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision;

(ii) during the pendency of any protest properly filed by the defendant under section 407 of this title prior to the institution of the proceeding under section 409 or 706 of this Act, section 205 or 206 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, or section 371 of title 18, United States Code, setting forth objections to the validity of such provision which the court finds to have been made in good faith; and

(iii) during the pendency of any judicial proceeding instituted by the defendant under this section with respect to such protest or instituted by the defendant under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision, and until the expiration of the time allowed in this section for the taking of further proceedings with respect thereto.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, stays shall be granted thereunder in civil proceedings only after judgment and upon application made within five days after judgment. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, in the case of a proceeding under section 409 (a) or 706 (a) of the Act or section 206 (b) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, the court granting a stay under this paragraph shall issue a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining or restraining, during the period of the stay, violations by the defendant of any provision of the regulation or order involved in the proceeding. If any provision of a regulation or order is determined to be invalid by judgment of the Emergency Court of Appeals which has become effective in accordance with section 408 (b) of this title, any proceeding pending in any court shall be dismissed, and any judgment in such proceeding vacated, to the extent that such proceeding or judgment is based upon violation of such provision. Except as provided in this subsection, the pendency of any protest under section 407 of this title, or judicial proceeding under this section, shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 409 or 706 of this Act, section 205 or 206 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, or section 371 of title 18, United States Code; nor, except as provided in this subsection, shall any retroactive effect be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation or order issued under this title.[47]

SEC. 409. INJUNCTION, IMPRISONMENT AND ACTION FOR DAMAGES

[(a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.]

(a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 405 of this title, he may make application to any district court of the United States or any United States court of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order, with or without such injunction or restraining order, shall be granted without bond.[48]

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 405 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

[48] Revised by sec. 104 (j), 1951 Amendments.

(c) If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such material or service for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, [but in no event shall such amount exceed the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, plus $10,000,][49] or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50 as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation or order in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling any material or service violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period, or compromise with the seller the liability which might be assessed against the seller in such an action. If such action is instituted, or such liability is compromised by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages, or a compromise, under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered, or prior to such compromise. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the material or service acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

[49] Deleted by sec. 104 (k), 1951 Amendments.

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of any material or service to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

(d) The President shall also prescribe the extent to which any payment made by way of fine pursuant to subsection (b) of this section 409, or any payment made to the United States or to any buyer in compromise or satisfaction of any liability or of any right of action, suit, or judgment, authorized pursuant to subsection (c) of this section 409 for selling any material or service, in violation of a regulation or order providing a ceiling or ceilings, shall be disregarded by the executive departments and other governmental agencies in determining the costs or expenses of any such person for the purposes of any other law or regulation.[50]

(e) The term "court of competent jurisdiction" as used in this section shall mean any Federal court of competent jurisdiction regardless of the amount in controversy and any State or Territorial court of competent jurisdiction.[51]

SEC. 410. GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF CHICKENS AND TURKEYS

Each contract providing for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys by any department or agency of the United States from any contractor, entered into at any time when ceiling prices are in effect under this Act for whichever of such fowl is covered by such contract, shall contain the following provision (with such change as may be necessary to describe the fowl covered by the contract):

"The contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for live chickens or live turkeys to be processed hereunder. In the event and to the extent that the actual price paid to the producers of live chickens or live turkeys purchased for the performance of this contract is less than such estimated price, the contract price shall be reduced by the same number of cents or fraction thereof, per pound."

SEC. 411. SUSPENSION OF REPORTING[52]

In the administration of this title, no person shall be required to furnish any reports or other information with respect to sales of materials or services at prices which are below ceiling, if such person certifies to the President that such sales were made at such prices.

SEC. 412. SUSPENSION OF CONTROLS[53]

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the President shall use the price, wage, and other powers conferred by this Act, as amended, to promote the earliest practicable balance between production and the demand therefor of materials and services, and that the general control of wages and prices shall be terminated as rapidly as possible consistent with the policies and purposes set forth in this Act; and that pending such termination, in order to avoid burdensome and unnecessary reporting and record keeping which retard rather than assist in the achievement of the purposes of this Act, price or wage regulations and orders, or both, shall be suspended in the case of any material or service or type of employment where such factors as condition of supply, existence of below ceiling prices, historical volatility of prices, wage pressures and wage relationships, or relative importance in relation to business costs or living costs will permit, and to the extent that such action will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect. It is further the policy of the Congress that when the President finds that the termination of the suspension and the restoration of ceilings on the sales or charges for such material or service, or the further stabilization of such wages, salaries, and other compensation, or both, is necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act, he shall by regulation or order terminate the suspension.

TITLE V.—SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

SEC. 502. POLICY

The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. To this end, the President is authorized (1) to initiate voluntary conferences between management, labor, and such persons as the President [53] Sec. 412 added by sec. 114, 1952 Amendments.

may designate to represent government and the public, and (2) subject to the provisions of section 503, to take such action as may be agreed upon in any such conference and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title. The President may designate such persons or agencies as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title[.]: Provided, however, That in any dispute between employees and carriers subject to the Railway Labor Act, as amended, the procedures of such Act shall be followed for the purpose of bringing about a settlement of such dispute. Any agency provided for by such Act, including any panel or panel board established by the President for the adjustment of disputes arising under the Railway Labor Act, as a prerequisite to effecting or recommending a settlement of such dispute, shall make a specific finding and certification that the changes proposed by such settlement or recommended settlement, are consistent with such standards as may then be in effect, established by or pursuant to law, for the purpose of controlling inflationary tendencies: Provided further, That in any nondisputed wage or salary adjustments proposed as a result of voluntary agreement through collective bargaining, mediation, or otherwise, the same finding and certification of consistency with existing stabilization policy shall be made by the separate panel, chairman thereof, or boards as established and authorized by the President. Where such finding and certification are made by such agency, panel, chairman thereof, or boards, they shall after approval by the Economic Stabilization Administrator be conclusive and it shall then be lawful for the employees and carriers, by agreement, to put into effect the changes proposed by the settlement, recommended settlement, or voluntary proposal with respect to which such findings and certification were made.[54]

SEC. 503. PREVAILING PRACTICES AND LAWS

In any such conference, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. [No action inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, or with other applicable laws shall be taken under this title.] No action inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, other Federal labor standards statutes, the Labor Man- agement Relations Act, 1947, the Railway Labor Act, as amended, or with other applicable laws shall be taken under this title.[55]

It is the sense of the Congress that, by reason of the work stoppage now existing in the steel industry, the national safety is imperiled, and the Congress therefore requests the President to invoke immediately the national emergency provisions (sections 206 to 210, inclusive) of the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, for the purpose of terminating such work stoppage.[56]

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF [CONSUMER AND] [57] REAL ESTATE CREDIT

THIS TITLE AUTHORIZES THE REGULATION OF [CONSUMER CREDIT AND] [58] REAL ESTATE CONSTRUCTION CREDIT ONLY

[SEC. 601. STANDARDS]

[To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law 386, Eightieth Congress (61 Stat. 921), to exercise consumer credit controls in accordance with and to carry out the provisions of Executive Order Numbered 8843 (August 9, 1941) until such time as the President determines that the exercise of such controls is no longer necessary, but in no event beyond the date on which this section terminates.

In the exercise of its authority under this section, the Board shall not (1) require a down payment of more than one-third or fix a maximum maturity of less than eighteen months in connection with instalment credit extended for the purchase of a new or used automobile, or (2) require a down payment of more than 15 per centum or fix a maximum maturity of less than eighteen months in connection with instalment credit extended for the purchase of any household appliance (including phonographs and radios and television sets), or (3) require a down payment of more than 15 per centum or fix a maximum maturity of less than eighteen months in connection with instalment credit extended for the purchase of household furniture and floor coverings (the down payments required by the Board in the exercise of its authority under paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) may be made in cash, or by trade-in or exchange of property, or by a combination of cash and trade-in or exchange of property), or (4) require a down payment of more than 10 per centum or fix a maximum maturity of less than thirty-six months in connection with instalment credit extended for residential repairs, alterations, or improvements or require any down payment on roofing or siding repairs, alterations or improvements in advance of completion thereof.][59]

SEC. 602. REAL ESTATE CONSTRUCTION CREDIT

(a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of real estate construction credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this section or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of real estate construction credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and (4) the needs for increased defense production.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any real estate construction credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this section; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this section, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this section to be registered; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration for violation of this section or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this section, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(d) For the purposes of this section, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, accounting, and other terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this section:

(1) "Real estate construction credit" means any credit which (i) is wholly or partly secured by, (ii) is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying, (iii) is for the purpose of financing, or (iv) involves a right to acquire or use, new construction on real property or real property on which there is new construction. As used in this paragraph the term "new construction" means any structure, or any major addition or major improvement to a structure, which has not been begun before 12 o'clock meridian, August 3, 1950. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the term "real estate construction credit" shall not include any loan or loans made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation, or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

(2) "Credit" means any loan, mortgage, deed of trust, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner therof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

SEC. 603. WILLFUL VIOLATION

[Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601 or 602 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 601, 602, or 605 or any regulation or order issued thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.[60]

SEC. 604. SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934

All the present provisions of sections 21 and 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, jurisdictions, and other matters), shall be as fully applicable with respect to the exercise by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System of credit controls under section 601 as they are now applicable with respect to the exercise by the Securities and Exchange Commission of its functions under that Act, and the Board shall have the same powers in the exercise of such credit controls as the Commission now has under the said sections 21 and 27.

SEC. 605. MODIFICATION OF REAL ESTATE CREDIT CONDITIONS; VETERANS' PREFERENCES

To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act the President may at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States Government, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall preserve the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law. Subject to the provision of this section with respect to preserving the relative credit preferences accorded to veterans under existing law, the President may require lenders or borrowers and their successors and assigns to comply with reasonable conditions and requirements, in addition to those provided by other laws, in connection with any loan of a type which has been the subject of action by the President under this section. Such conditions and requirements may vary for classifications of persons or transactions as the President may prescribe, and failure to comply therewith shall constitute a violation of this section.[61]

SEC. 606. DOWN PAYMENT REQUIREMENTS ON VETERANS' HOMES[62]

Not more than 10 per centum down payment shall be required pursuant to section 602 or section 605 of this Act in connection with the loan on any home not made or guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration and the transaction price of which home does not exceed $7,000; nor more than 15 per centum in connection with any such loan on any home the transaction price of which exceeds $7,000 but does not exceed $10,000; nor more than 20 per centum in connection with any such loan on any home the transaction price of which exceeds $10,000 but does not exceed $12,000. The term of any loan referred to in the preceding sentence or in the last proviso of section 605 shall not be required to be less than twenty-five years.

SEC. 607. RELAXATION OF CREDIT CONTROLS [63]

Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 602 and 605 of this title, the authority of the President which is derived from said sections to impose credit regulations relative to residential property shall not be exercised with respect to extensions of credit made during any "period of residential credit control relaxation", as that term is herein defined, in such manner as to impose any down payment requirement in excess of 5 per centum of the transaction price. The President shall cause to be made estimates of the number of permanent, non-farm, family dwelling units, the construction of which has been started during each calendar month and, on the basis of such estimates, he shall cause to be made estimates of the annual rate of construction starts during each such month, after making reasonable allowance for seasonal variations in the rate of construction. If for any three consecutive months the annual rate of construction starts so found for each of the three months falls to a level below an annual rate of 1,200,000 starts per year, the President shall cause to be published in the Federal Register an announcement of the beginning of a "period of residential credit control relaxation", which period shall begin not later than the first day of the second calendar month following such three consecutive months. Each such relaxation period may be terminated by the President at any time after the annual rate of construction starts thereafter estimated for each of any three consecutive months exceeds the level referred to in the preceding sentence.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. ENCOURAGEMENT OF SMALL-BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act:

[63] Sec. 607 added by sec. 116 (b), 1952 Amendments.

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, or orders, or amendments thereto issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation there shall be fair representation for independent small, for medium, and for large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

(c) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this Act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a significant dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such a manner as to make available, so far as practicable, for business and various segments thereof in the normal channel of distribution of such material, a fair share of the available civilian supply based, so far as practicable, on the share received by such business under normal conditions during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950 [and having due regard to the needs of new businesses.] and having due regard to the current competitive position of established business: Provided, That the limitations and restrictions imposed on the production of specific items shall not exclude new concerns from a fair and reasonable share of total authorized production.[64]

SEC. 702. DEFINITIONS

As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, association, or any other organized group of persons, or legal successor or representative of the foregoing, and includes the United States or any agency thereof, or any other government, or any of its political subdivisions, or any agency of any of the foregoing: Provided, That no punishment provided by this Act shall apply to the United States, or to any such government, political subdivision, or government agency.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

---

[64] Changed by sec. 108, 1951 Amendments.

(c) The word "facilities" shall not include farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses.

(d) The term "national defense" means the operations and activities of the armed forces, the Atomic Energy Commission, or any other Government department or agency directly or indirectly and substantially concerned with the national defense, or operations or activities in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(e) The words "wages, salaries, and other compensation" shall include all forms of remuneration to employees by their employers for personal services, including, but not limited to, vacation and holiday payments, night shift and other bonuses, incentive payments, year-end bonuses, employer contributions to or payments of insurance or welfare benefits, employer contributions to a pension fund or annuity, payments in kind, and premium overtime payments.

SEC. 703. DELEGATIONS; NEW AGENCIES

(a) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies (and the President is hereby authorized to create such new agencies, other than corporate agencies, as he deems necessary), and he may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. [The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government.] The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix their compensation, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, the head of one such agency to be paid at a rate comparable to the compensation paid to the heads of executive departments of the Government, and other such heads, assistant heads, and officials at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government.[65] Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

[65] Sentence revised by sec. 109 (a), 1951 Amendments.

(b) The head and assistant heads of any independent agency created to administer the authority conferred by title IV of this Act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There shall be included among the policy-making officers of each regional office administering the authority conferred by title IV of this Act a resident of each State served by such office whose governor requests such representation.[66]

SEC. 704. ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS

The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this Act, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or to facilitate enforcement of this Act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act. No rule, regulation, or order issued under this Act which restricts the use of natural gas (either directly, or by restricting the use of facilities for the consumption of natural gas, or in any other manner) shall apply in any State in which a public regulatory agency has authority to restrict the use of natural gas and certifies to the President that it is exercising that authority to the extent necessary to accomplish the objectives of this Act.[67]

SEC. 705. OBTAINING INFORMATION

(a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, and administer oaths and affirmations to,[68] any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority, and it is assured that no adequate and authoritative data are available from any Federal or other responsible agency. In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in this subsection, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the President, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testfying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited or willfully fails to perform any act required by the above provisions of this section, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year or both.

(e) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

(f) Any person subpenaed under this section shall have the right to make a record of his testimony and to be represented by counsel.[69]

SEC. 706. INJUNCTIONS; VENUE; SERVICE OF PROCESS

(a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this Act, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, [or other order shall be granted without bond.] or other order, with or without such injunction or restraining order, shall be granted without bond.[70]

(b) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act. All litigation arising under this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney General.

SEC. 707. EXCULPATORY PROVISION

No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from [his] [71] compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 708. VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS

(a) The President is authorized to consult with representatives of industry, business, financing, agriculture, labor, and other interests, with a view to encouraging the making by such persons with the approval by the President of voluntary agreements and programs to further the objectives of this Act.

(b) No act or omission to act pursuant to this Act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President pursuant to a voluntary agreement or program approved under subsection (a) and found by the President to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense shall be construed to be within the prohibition of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(c) The authority granted in subsection (b) shall be delegated only (1) to officials who shall for the purpose of such delegation be required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless otherwise required to be so appointed, and (2) upon the condition that such officials consult with the Attorney General and with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder, and (3) upon the condition that such officials obtain the approval of the Attorney General to any request thereunder before making the request. For the purpose of carrying out the objectives of title I of this Act, the authority granted in subsection (b) of this section shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government.

[71] Deleted by sec. 118, 1952 Amendments.

(d) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

(e) The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this Act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within ninety days after the approval of this Act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

(f) After the date of enactment of the Defense Production Act Amendments of 1952, no voluntary program or agreement for the control of credit shall be approved or carried out under this section.[72]

SEC. 709. STATEMENTS OF CONSIDERATION

The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof. Any rule, regulation, or order, or amendment thereto, issued under authority of this Act shall be accompanied by a statement that in the formulation thereof there has been consultation with industry representatives, including trade association representatives, and that consideration has been given to their recommendations, or that special circumstances have rendered such consultation impracticable or contrary to the interest of the national defense, but no such rule, regulation, or order shall be invalid by reason of any subsequent finding by judicial or other authority that such a statement is inaccurate.

SEC. 710. SUPER GRADES; CONSULTANTS; SPECULATION

(a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

(c) The President is authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act to employ experts and consultants or organizations thereof, as authorized by section 55a of title 5 of the United States Code. Individuals so employed may be compensated at rates not in excess of $50 per diem and while away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses while so employed. The President is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(d) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(e) Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or any department or agency thereof (including any Member of the Senate or House of Representatives), receives, by virtue of his office or employment, confidential information, and (1) uses such information in speculating directly or indirectly on any commodity exchange, or (2) discloses such information for the purpose of aiding any other person so to speculate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. As used in this section, the term "speculate" shall not include a legitimate hedging transaction, or a purchase or sale which is accompanied by actual delivery of the commodity.

(f) The President, when he deems such action necessary, may make provision for the printing and distribution of reports, in such number and in such manner as he deems appropriate, concerning the actions taken to carry out the objectives of this Act.[73]

SEC. 711. APPROPRIATIONS

There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 712. JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON DEFENSE PRODUCTION

(a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production (hereinafter referred to as the committee), to be composed of ten members as follows:

(1) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and

(2) Five members who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, three from the majority and two from the minority party, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members, one of whom shall be a member of the Senate and the other a member of the House of Representatives.

[73] Added by sec. 109 (f), 1951 Amendments.

(b) [It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs authorized by this Act, and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs.] It shall be the function of the Committee to make a continuous study of the programs and of the fairness to consumers of the prices authorized by this Act and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration thereof.[74] Upon request, the committee shall aid the standing committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any part of the programs authorized by this Act; and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable. Any department, official, or agency administering any of such programs shall, at the request of the committee, consult with the committee, from time to time, with respect to their activities under this Act.

(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena (to be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the committee) or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

(d) The committee is authorized to appoint and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and organizations thereof, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable.

(e) The expenses of the committee under this section, which shall not exceed $50,000 in any fiscal year, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Clerk of the House of Representatives out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the Senate in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made without regard to any other provision of law.

[74] Sentence revised by sec. 119, 1952 Amendments.

SEC. 713. TERRITORIAL APPLICABILITY

The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 714. SMALL DEFENSE PLANTS ADMINISTRATION

(a) (1) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business concerns be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act. In order to carry out this policy there is hereby created an agency under the name 'Small Defense Plants Administration' (hereinafter referred to as the Administration), which Administration shall be under the general direction and supervision of the President and shall not be affiliated with or be within any other agency or department of the Federal Government. The principal office of the Administration shall be located in the District of Columbia, but the Administration may establish such branch offices in other places in the United States as may be determined by the Administrator of the Administration. For the purposes of this section, a small-business concern shall be deemed to be one which is independently owned and operated and which is not dominant in its field of operation. The Administration, in making a detailed definition, may use these criteria, among others: independency of ownership and operation, number of employees, dollar volume of business, and nondominance in its field.

(2) The Administration is authorized to obtain money from the Treasury of the United States, for use in the performance of the powers and duties granted to or imposed upon it by law, not to exceed a total of $50,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For this purpose appropriations not to exceed $50,000,000 are hereby authorized to be made to a revolving fund in the Treasury. Advances shall be made to the Administration from the revolving fund when requested by the Administration. This revolving fund shall be used for the purposes enumerated subsequently in subsection (b) (1) (B), (C), and (D). Reimbursements made to the Administration under these operations shall revert to the revolving fund for use for the same purposes.

(3) The management of the Administration shall be vested in an Administrator who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be a person of outstanding qualifications known to be familiar and sympathetic with small-business needs and problems. The Administrator shall receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 per annum. The Administrator shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as Administrator. The Administrator is authorized to appoint two Deputy Administrators to assist in the execution of the functions vested in the Administration. Deputy Administrators shall be paid at the rate of $15,000 per annum.

(4) The Administration shall not have succession, beyond June 30, [1952,] 1953,[75] except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to an Act of Congress. It shall have power to adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed; to select and employ such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the transaction of business of the Administration; to define their authority and duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalties thereof. The Administration, with the consent of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, including any field service thereof, officers, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section.

(5) All moneys of the Administration not otherwise employed may be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States subject to check by authority of the Administration or in any Federal Reserve bank. The Federal Reserve banks are authorized and directed to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Administration in the general performance of its powers conferred by this Act. All insured banks, when designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as custodians, and financial agents for the Administration.

(b) (1) Without regard to any other provision of law except the regulations prescribed under section 201 of the First War Powers Act, 1941, as amended, the Administration is empowered—

(A) to recommend to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans or advances, on such terms and conditions and with such maturity as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may determine on its own discretion, to enable small-business concerns to finance plant construction, conversion, or expansion, including the acquisition of land; or finance the acquisition of equipment, facilities, machinery, supplies, or materials; or to finance research, development, and experimental work on new or improved products or processes; or to supply such concerns with capital to be used in the manufacture of articles, equipment, supplies, or materials for defense or essential civilian purposes; or to establish and operate technical laboratories to serve small-business concerns; such loans or advances to be made or effected either directly by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions through agreements to participate in insurance of loans, or by the purchase of participations, or otherwise;

(B) to enter into contracts with the United States Government and any department, agency, or officer thereof having procurement powers obligating the Administration to furnish articles, equipment, supplies, or materials to the Government;

(C) to arrange for the performance of such contracts by letting subcontracts to small-business concerns or others for the manufacture, supply, or assembly of such articles, equipment, supplies, or materials, or parts thereof, or servicing or processing in connection therewith, or such management services as may be necessary to enable the Administration to perform such contracts; and

(D) to provide technical and managerial aids to small-business concerns, by maintaining a clearinghouse for technical information, by cooperating with other Government agencies, by disseminating information, and by such other activities as are deemed appropriate by the Administration.

(2) In any case in which the Administration certifies to any officer of the Government having procurement powers that the Administration is competent to perform any specific Government procurement contract to be let by any such officers, such officer shall be authorized to let such procurement contract to the Administration upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the Administration and the procurement officer.

(c) (1) Whoever makes any statement knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any security, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any applicant any loan, or extension thereof by renewal, deferment of action, or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Administration, or for the purpose of obtaining money, property, or anything of value, under this section, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

(2) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Administration (A) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged or otherwise entrusted to it, or (B) with intent to defraud the Administration or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner of the Administration makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Administration, or, without being duly authorized, draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, or (C) with intent to defraud participates, shares, receives directly or indirectly any money, profit, property, or benefit through any transaction, loan, commission, contract, or any other act of the Administration, or (D) gives any unauthorized information concerning any future action or plan of the Administration which might affect the value of securities, or, having such knowledge, invests or speculates, directly or indirectly, in the securities or property of any company or corporation receiving loans or other assistance from the Administration shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(d) (1) It shall be the duty of the Administration and it is hereby empowered, to coordinate and to ascertain the means by which the productive capacity of small-business concerns can be most effectively utilized for national defense and essential civilian production.

(2) It shall be the duty of the Administration and it is hereby empowered, to consult and cooperate with appropriate governmental agencies in the issuance of all orders limiting or expanding production by, or in the formulation of policy in granting priorities to, business concerns. All such governmental agencies are required, before issuing such orders or announcing such priority policies, to consult with the Administration in order that small-business concerns will be most effectively utilized in the production of articles, equipment, supplies and materials for national defense and essential civilian purposes.

(e) The Administration shall have power, and it is hereby directed, whenever it determines such action is necessary—

(1) to make a complete inventory of all productive facilities of small-business concerns which can be used for defense and essential civilian production or to arrange for such inventory to be made by any other governmental agency which has the facilities. In making any such inventory, the appropriate agencies in the several States shall be requested to furnish an inventory of the productive facilities of small-business concerns in each respective State if such an inventory is available or in prospect;

(2) to consult and cooperate with officers of the Government having procurement powers, in order to utilize the potential productive capacity of plants operated by small-business concerns;

(3) to obtain information as to methods and practices which Government prime contractors utilize in letting subcontracts and to take action to encourage the letting of subcontracts by prime contractors to small-business concerns at prices and on conditions and terms which are fair and equitable;

(4) to take such action, authorized under this section, as is necessary to provide small-business concerns with an adequate incentive, excluding subsidies, to engage in defense and essential civilian production and to facilitate the conversion and equipping of plants of small-business concerns for such production;

(5) to determine within any industry the concerns, firms, persons, corporations, partnerships, cooperatives, or other business enterprises, which are to be designated "small-business concerns" for the purpose of effectuating the provisions of this section;

(6) to certify to Government procurement officers with respect to the competency, as to capacity and credit, of any small-business concern or group of such concerns to perform a specific Government procurement contract;

(7) to obtain from any Federal department, establishment, or agency engaged in defense procurement or in the financing of defense procurement or production such reports concerning the letting of contracts and subcontracts and making of loans to business concerns as it may deem pertinent in carrying out its functions under this Act;

(8) to obtain from suppliers of materials information pertaining to the method of filling orders and the bases for allocating their supply, whenever it appears that any small business is unable to obtain materials for defense or essential civilian production from its normal sources;

(9) to make studies and recommendations to the appropriate Federal agencies to insure a fair and equitable share of materials, supplies, and equipment to small-business concerns to effectuate the defense program or for essential civilian purposes;

(10) to consult and cooperate with all Government agencies for the purpose of insuring that small-business concerns shall receive fair and reasonable treatment from said agencies; and

(11) to establish such advisory boards and committees wholly representative of small business as may be found necessary to achieve the purposes of this section.

(f) (1) In any case in which a small-business concern or group of such concerns has been certified by or under the authority of the Administration to be a competent Government contractor with respect to capacity and credit as to a specific Government procurement contract, the officers of the Government having procurement powers are directed to accept such certification as conclusive, and are authorized to let such Government procurement contract to such concern or group of concerns without requiring it to meet any other requirement with respect to capacity and credit.

(2) The Congress has as its policy that a fair proportion of the total purchases and contracts for supplies and services for the Government shall be placed with small-business concerns. To effectuate such policy, small-business concerns within the meaning of this section shall receive any award or contract or any part thereof as to which it is determined by the Administration and the contracting procurement agencies (A) to be in the interest of mobilizing the Nation's full productive capacity, or (B) to be in the interest of the national defense program, to make such award or let such contract to a small-business concern.

(3) Whenever materials or supplies are allocated by law, a fair and equitable percentage thereof shall be allocated to small plants unable to obtain the necessary materials or supplies from usual sources. Such percentage shall be determined by the head of the lawful allocating authority after giving full consideration to the claims presented by the Administration.

(4) Whenever the President invokes the powers given him in this Act to allocate, or approve agreements allocating, any material, to an extent which the President finds will result in a significant dislocation of the normal distribution in the civilian market, he shall do so in such a manner as to make available, so far as practicable, for business and various segments thereof in the normal channel of distribution of such material, a fair share of the available civilian supply based, so far as practicable, on the share received by such business under normal conditions during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950: Provided, That the limitations and restrictions imposed on the production of specific items should give due consideration to the needs of new concerns.

(g) The Administration shall make a report every ninety days of operations under this title to the President, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Such report shall include the names of the business concerns to whom contracts are let, and for whom financing is arranged, by the Administration, together with the amounts involved, and such report shall include such other information, and such comments and recommendations, with respect to the relation of small-business concerns to the defense effort, as the Administration may deem appropriate.

(h) The Administration is hereby empowered to make studies of the effect of price, credit, and other controls imposed under the defense program and whenever it finds that these controls discriminate against or impose undue hardship upon small business, to make recommendations to the appropriate Federal agency for the adjustment of controls to the needs of small business.

(i) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make loans and advances upon the recommendation of the Small Defense Plants Administration as provided in (b) (1) (A) of this section not to exceed an aggregate of $100,000,000 outstanding at any one time, on such terms and conditions and with such maturities as Reconstruction Finance Corporation may determine.

(j) The President may transfer to the Administration any functions, powers, and duties of any department or agency which relates primarily to small-business problems.

(k) No loan shall be recommended or equipment, facilities, or services furnished by the Administration under this section to any business enterprise unless the owners, partners or officers of such business enterprise (1) certify to the Administration the names of any attorneys, agents, or other persons engaged by or on behalf of such business enterprise for the purpose of expediting applications made to the Administration for assistance of any sort, and the fees paid or to be paid to any such persons, and (2) execute an agreement binding any such business enterprise for a period of two years after any assistance is rendered by the Administration to such business enterprise, to refrain from employing, tendering any office or employment to, or retaining for professional services, any person who, on the date such assistance or any part thereof was rendered, or within one year prior thereto, shall have served as an officer, attorney, agent or employee of the Administration occupying a position or engaging in activities which the Administration shall have determined involve discretion with respect to the granting of assistance under this section.

(l) To the fullest extent the Administration deems practicable, it shall make a fair charge for the use of Government-owned property and make and let contracts on a basis that will result in a recovery of the direct costs incurred by the Administration.

(m) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this section.[76]
